Finns Hurl Back Aid for 2 Trapped Divisions

Russians Suffering Heavily, They Say; Soviet Bombs Sink Finnish Steamer

By K. J. Eskelund.
Copyright by New York Times

New heaps of Russian dead were piled up in front of the Finnish lines as the defenders' machinegun fire and artillery volleys repeatedly drove back the invaders.

The day's fiercest fighting was at Kollaanjoki, where the Finns again repulsed Russian troops attempting to drive their way southwestward toward Kitelad, on Lake Ladoga's north shore, where two Russian divisions are said to have been trapped for almost a week.

Encircled Weeks Ago

The Russians in the Kitela region were encircled by the Finns some weeks ago. In an effort to reinforce these marooned units, the Soviet commanders started a force along the railroad and highway from the Russian border. At first the advance was easy, but now it appears that the Finns have halted the relief force at strong natural fortifications where the railroad from the east crosses the Kollaa River.

The Russian units, stranded around Kitela, started to penetrate Finland along the eastern shore of Lake Ladoga just after the war started. They were several divisions strong then, but they parted before reaching Kitela, and large numbers of them were diverted northward, evidently because the lack of good roads made a westward movement from the Soviet border impracticable.

The forces moving north from Lake Ladoga were surrounded by the Finns some time ago and virtually annihilated in the regions of Loimola and Syskyjaervi, where thousands of Russians fell.

All Available Men Used

The divisions remaining close to the Ladoga shore continued a slow advance, but the Finns stopped them at Kitela. Since then they have shown no disposition to move westward. Russian planes have been dropping supplies to them by parachute daily.

The main Russian force farther south attempted to send relief units to the beleaguered forces across the ice of Lake Ladoga, but from strong positions on hundreds of islets in the lake, the defenders repulsed these advances.

It was then that the Russians resorted to the desperate attempt to drive by sheer force of numbers along the railroad that winds westward from the Soviet border about 60 miles north of the invaders' original starting point.

Since Sunday, the Russian command, hoping to relieve the Kitela divisions before another debacle such as those which destroyed the 163d and 44th divisions, has been hurling all available forces against the Finnish lines.

Batteries Reported Wrecked

Today's communique, which covers Tuesday's action, said Russian losses were "very heavy." Tuesday's communique declared Russian dead had "mounted in the last two days to upward of 1,000, and Monday's mentioned "570 enemy dead" in the Finnish positions, in addition to hundreds in front of the lines.

Kitela, Loimola, and Syskyjarvi are in a line about 20 miles from the Russian border, with Kitela at the southern end, six miles from the lake.

Again today the Russians sacrificed additional hundreds of their men in head-on drives against the Mannerheim Line on the Karelian Isthmus. After hours of violent artillery fire, large infantry forces attempted to advance across the ice of

Gene Autry Steals Fort Myer Show for Paralysis Victims

By Elizabeth Henney.

That rough-riding, tough-riding cowboy, Gene Autry stole the show last night at the President's Birthday Horse Show at Fort Myer, Va., when he rode cheering through a flaming hoop as a climax to an evening of thrilling rides.

No powder-puff cowboy, the movie star won the admiration and respect of the entire personnel of the post, officers and men, when he went through the rehearsal with them yesterday afternoon.

"That guy can ride with the best of them and don't let anyone tell you he can't," was the opinion of those who had seen him rehearse, and of the audience later.

Society, official, residential and diplomatic from Washington, and the hunt country folk from the surrounding countryside, turned out 1,500 strong to see the show. All agreed it was well worth the trip and the price, both for the show itself and for the benefit for which it was given, the campaign against infantile paralysis.

With military precision, the audience was called to attention by a bugler who blew the tally-ho. The

Loan to Finns Passes Senate Banking Group

$20,000,000 Voted 18-2; Taft, Danaher Attack Import Bank

By Robert C. Albright
Post Staff Writer

The Senate Banking Committee yesterday approved compromise legislation tacitly authorizing the Export-Import Bank of Washington to advance up to $20,000,000 more to Finland to make non-military purchases here.

The vote was 18 to 2. Only Senators Taft, of Ohio, and Danaher, of Connecticut (Republicans), cast negative ballots. They protested it was not a Finnish relief measure at all, but chiefly a broadening of the bank's South-American loan authority.

The measure, which did not mention Finland by name, will be reported to the Senate today, but still must run the gantlet of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee. The margin for the bill was reported closer in that group.

The Banking Committee's bill, closely following the President's Finnish aid "suggestions" to Congress, would double the lending authority of the Export-Import Bank by adding another $100,000,000 to its current revolving fund.

Specifically barred by committee amendments was use of the borrowed funds by any country for purchase here of articles listed as "arms, ammunition or implements of

House Refuses To Override Ohio Fund Veto

President Rejects Bill to Reimburse State Security Money

By John B. Oakes

Text of Veto Message, Page 9.

A determined Ohio delegation, backed by solid Republican support, was thwarted yesterday in efforts to override President Roosevelt's veto of a bill giving Ohio an estimated $1,300,000.

With a two-thirds majority necessary to surmount the veto, advocates of the relief bill obtained only 171 to 153 against it.

The measure, which allegedly had the support of Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt, would have reimbursed Ohio for payments the Social Security Board withheld in October, 1938, on a charge of defective administration of the State's old-age assistance law.

Passage of the bill, said the President in his veto message, would "create a precedent that would seriously endanger the success of the entire social security program." It would mean that States could violate Federal standards "with impunity, and still get their money," he said.

Immediately into the fray sprang Representative Jenkins (Republican), of Ohio, father of the bill, and several other Ohioans in the House.

Asserting that McNutt had given written approval of the measure,

First Lady Asks Sacrifice For Peace

U. S. Never Willing To Pay Price, She Tells Conference on Cause, Cure of War

By Robert T. DeVore

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt told 550 women delegates to the fifteenth Conference on the Cause and Cure for War last night that before America can do its bit for world peace it must be prepared to make sacrifices for it.

"The time is coming," she said to the representatives of 11 women's organizations comprising the conference, "when the American people will have to decide what they really want to do for peace."

She urged the women to take back to their home communities these thoughts:

"The world has grown too small. The sooner we know that, the sooner we know that war anywhere is a menace to peace everywhere, and the sooner we are ready to make sacrifices for peace.

"We have never been willing to pay for peace."

Sacrifices Suggested

Dr. William Allan Neilson, president emeritus of Smith College, suggested to the conference some of the sacrifices he felt Americans could make.

He said the first chance for sacrifice comes today with the expiration of the commercial treaty with Japan. He described it as an opportunity to end the sale of war materials to Japan.

The United States has remained calm, he said, while a "country (China) which has been our friend has been subjected to treatment unparalleled in the history of the world."

Dr. Neilson advocated continuation of the Administration's reciprocal trade treaty making powers, adoption of some form of anti-lynching legislation and revision of immigration laws to permit war refugees to enter this country.

Program for 1940

His proposals fell in line with those made during the day when the conference's international relations committee presented for approval today a seven-point peace program for 1940. These points were:

Renewal of the trade agreements act.

An end to economic aid to Japan and transference of it to China.

Support to the Government in offers to mediate the European war, "these offers to be accompanied by an assurance of continuing American participation in

Roosevelt Broke Faith, Lewis Says

President Will Not Run and Would Be Beaten if He Did, C.I.O. Chief Asserts

By the Associated Press.

Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 24.—John L. Lewis, splitting decisively with the New Deal, today asserted the Democratic Party had broken faith with labor and predicted President Roosevelt would encounter "ignominious defeat" if he sought a third term.

The president of the United Mine Workers of America and the Congress of Industrial Organizations told the U. M. W. convention "the Democratic Party is in default to the American people." He warned that only a coalition with labor would defeat the Republicans in November.

"After seven years of power," he said the Democratic Party "finds itself without solution for the major questions of unemployment, low national income, mounting internal debt, increasing direct and consumer taxation and restricted foreign trade."

Asks No Indorsement

Expressing disbelief that Roosevelt would seek reelection, Lewis remarked:

"Conceding that the Democratic National Convention could be coerced or dragooned into renominating him, I am convinced that, with the conditions now confronting the Nation and the dissatisfaction now permeating the minds of the people, his candidacy would result in ignominious defeat."

Lewis in his surprise attack on the New Deal suggested it would be unwise for the convention to indorse any candidate for President at present. He recommended it empower the union's international executive board "to deal with this problem as conditions warrant."

Two other potential Democratic Presidential candidates, Vice President John N. Garner and Paul V. McNutt, Federal Security administrator, previously were denounced by Lewis, whose opinions are a beacon for the more than 600,000 U. M. W. members.

Advice Disregarded

In Washington, Senator Burton K. Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, who will speak before the mine workers Friday, was "surprised" by Lewis' blunt assertion, but said it would be "extremely difficult" for the President to obtain re-election.

Lewis frankly accused the Democratic Party of failing to keep faith with his followers who, he said,

300 Yugoslavs Saved as Destroyer Hits Reef and Sinks

Split, Yugoslavia, Jan. 24 (AP).—The Yugoslav destroyer Ljubljana, 1,400 tons, sank within an hour at the naval base of Sibenik today after it struck a submerged cliff.

Commander Ahlin committed suicide when the boat sank, while the other officers and crew, numbering approximately 300, jumped overboard. All were rescued.

The Ljubljana was completed only last spring. Her loss was a heavy blow to the Yugoslav navy which has but two destroyers left.

11 Bombs Miss In German Raid On Shetlands

London, Jan. 24 (AP).—Three German bombers thoroughly scouted the Shetland Islands for two hours today and dropped 11 bombs, all of which fell harmlessly in the sea or on land.

Some of the bombs were aimed at a trawler and a steamer. The raiders disappeared in a high cloud when British fighters went after them.

It was the thirteenth attack on the Shetlands since the start of the war.

The air ministry published its eighteenth casualty list of the war tonight, listing 15 men killed in action, 16 missing and 22 killed in active service. The last previous list was published January 12.

Unofficial totals of air force casualties for the war are:

In action—123 killed, 17 missing and believed to be prisoners, 107 missing, 2 dead of wounds and 4 wounded.

On active service—233 killed, 11 missing and believed killed, 1 dead of wounds, 7 wounded and 118 who died.

Cab Driver Airs Views on Congress To Lawmaker Fare

Between the White House and the Capitol, a taxi driver entertained his fare yesterday with his opinions of Congress, Congressmen and Washington, official and social.

His opinions were somewhat short of complimentary and the cab crackled with invective as they drove along, the driver pointing out numerous places of interest. When they drew up at the House Office Building, he asked if his passenger was going to see "them blank Congressmen."

Representative John W. Flannagan, jr., Virginia Democrat, said "yes," paid his fare, and strolled toward his office.

Hornblow Triumphs: It's Environment That Makes Him Go 'Round in Circles

By Homer Hornblow,

Metropoliton Police Precinct Station No. 8, Jan. 24.—The day dawned bright and clear. In the small, barred aperture in the ceiling of my cell a ray of light appeared and felt its way timidly at first along the grim stone wall. The prison stirred, and came to life to face another day. Somewhere a man was singing a melancholy song.

I had not slept. But I was calmer now than I had been the night before. Somehow I had found spiritual peace, and, through the long, dark hours had reconciled myself to accept unflinchingly whatever was in store for me.

I struggled upright in the hard, unyielding cot on which I had spent the miserable night. At the far end of the corridor I could see guards scurrying about their morning tasks, unaware, apparently, of the misery locked within the row of cells they served.

Toward mid-morning one of the guards brought me a meager breakfast and stood just outside the bars while I ate. When I was through, before he took the plates away, he stopped to chat.

"The Old Man's on the way over," he told me. "It won't take him long to tell what's wrong with you."

When he had gone, I was more mystified than ever. Who was the Old Man, I wondered, and just what did they plan to do with me?

Just then my attention was attracted by a commotion in the corridor, and, looking out, I saw that a stranger had arrived. I looked again, more closely, and became aware that the newcomer was a most extraordinary man.

A man of ancient vintage was the stranger, but it required close scrutiny to discover that he had lived for many years. For, tall and erect, his handsome figure draped in morning clothes, a tall silk hat perched jauntily upon his head, he looked like nothing more than a modern glamour boy.

I couldn't help admiring him as he stood there in the corridor, engaged in earnest conversation with the sergeant in charge of this detention station.

Finally they turned, and came nearer to my cell. As they approached I overheard the stranger say: "Newspaper man, eh? It has been my experience, Sergeant, that most newspaper people are unbalanced mentally."

Then they were at my cell, and the sergeant was unlocking the

D. C. Digs Out of Snow; Storm Halts Bay Ships; Liner Appeals for Help

Washington and its two neighboring States today were slowly shaking themselves free of 9.5 inches of snow left by a blizzard which struck late Tuesday, paralyzing traffic, throwing public transportation out of joint and playing havoc with Chesapeake Bay shipping.

One passenger liner was helpless off Cape Hatteras with a broken rudder post and appealed for help. A second ship rode out the storm in Chesapeake Bay at anchor and reached her dock 15 hours late. A freighter with a crew of nine men was aground.

Two Washington boys were seriously injured in a coasting accident and minor traffic accidents were reported throughout the city.

Virginia highways east of the Blue Ridge were choked by heavy drifts and 6,000 men and all equipment were called to clear them. Maryland, particularly its Eastern Shore and the southern part, were smothered under heavy drifts.

Washington will gain surcease from snow for a while, the Weather Bureau indicated last night. Today, it forecast, will be fair and colder, with minimum temperatures near 14 degrees. Tomorrow will be fair and cold. Saturday will continue cold with moderate winds.

U. S. Workers Late

In Washington, Thomas Collins, 14, of 6262 Twenty-ninth street northwest, and Francis Joannini, 13, of 2934 Legation street northwest, were seriously hurt when a bus backed over their sleds at Broad Branch road and McKinley streets northwest. Mrs. Pearl Joannini, Francis' mother, was on the bus.

At Emergency Hospital Thomas was reported to have suffered a fractured pelvis and Francis a fractured right leg and ruptured blood vessels. Eighth Precinct police said the bus was backing up to permit another to make a turn.

The snowfall meant no more than inconvenience to Government or shop workers who almost without exception were either late or stayed away from the office. There was joy for more than 90,000 public school children when classrooms were closed at noon.

Schools in nearby counties of Virginia and Maryland opened as usual, but with skeleton classes. In many instances school buses were unable to pierce heavy drifts to complete their rounds. In others, parents were unwilling to send their children into the blizzard.

Real Suffering in Maryland

Washington's struggle to remove the snow will require the labor of at least 6,300 men—the total of three shifts employed by the District government and the Capital Transit Co. The cost to the Government alone will be $20,000.

William A. Xanten, supervisor of city refuse, mobilized three shifts of 1,500 men each and equipped them with 314 trucks to remove the snow.

The transit company worked about 600 men in three shifts to clear trolley tracks and bus lanes and to keep melting snow and ice from cutting off power.

District officials, furthermore, expected that a fourth shift of 1,500 men would renew the attack on 12 and 15-foot street corner snowpiles today.

To three southern Maryland counties the storm which swept in from the South brought renewal of real suffering.

St. Marys County, 45 miles from Washington, was isolated by snow

Doctors Give Ruhland Vote Of Confidence

D. C. Medical Society Urges Retention Of Health Officer

By Gerald G. Gross

The District Medical Society last night unanimously adopted a resolution praising the record of Dr. George C. Ruhland, District health officer, strongly urging his retention and opposing the Commissioners' proposal to legislate him out of office.

The head of the health department, who would be purged under the Seal reorganization plan which the District Building has approved, was described as one who has "given the District an able, efficient and modern administration, often against considerable odds and has beyond question very greatly improved the public health of the District."

The Federation of Citizens Associations and numerous affiliated groups had previously indorsed Dr. Ruhland's 5-year administration, but the doctors' action last night, amounting to a vote of confidence, is expected to have the deepest influence in Congressioinal consideration of the ouster plan, whose origin has never been explained by the Commissioners.

Took Cut in Pay

In presenting the report of the society's executive board, Dr. Francis X. McGovern, chairman, explained that two committees had given the proposal careful study. One was the public health committee, headed by Dr. John Minor, and the other the public policy committee, of which Dr. Edgar Copeland is chairman.

The former group brought in a report that local health affairs "should be administered by an official chosen by the constituted agencies as, at least in affairs dealing with our own public health, the residents of the District are qualified for, and deserve, self-government."

It pointed out that Dr. Ruhland came here from Syracuse, N. Y., in 1935 at "considerable reduction in salary." On his record, it said, he

'Crash' Board Named to Cut Traffic Toll

Program Projected In 'Crackdown' to Curb Auto Fatalities

By Howard F. Wentworth

An elaborate program to combat traffic fatalities during 1940 was announced yesterday by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, police superintendent. The plan, part of a general traffic-control "crackdown," includes:

Creation of a new unit within the Police Department to review and analyze each fatal or serious accident.

Appointment of a captain and a lieutenant to attend a two-week training course at the Northwestern University Traffic Safety Institute.

Ultimate establishment of trained "crash" squads to carry on accident investigation and prevention work.

Board Named

The new accident review board, named yesterday by Maj. Brown, is headed by Inspector L. I. H. Edwards, police executive officer, and includes Inspectors William E. Holmes, traffic supervisor, and Benjamin Lamb; Capt. Milton D. Smith, head of the traffic division, and Detective Sergt. William Liverman, of the homicide squad.

The board will study each accident in which there is a death or major injury, compiling facts which will be used in city-wide efforts to reduce the District's crash toll, Maj. Brown said. The board's findings will then be sent to the commanding officers in precincts where the accidents occur.

Two Designated for Course

"Through a comprehensive analysis of each accident," said Brown, "we hope to uncover physical facts which will help us in reducing our annual loss of lives. We want to know just how and why accidents are happening."

Every effort will be made, he added, to prosecute drivers found at fault in serious crashes. Similar attempts will be made to correct street or lighting defects which are found

FBI Seizes Quantico Marine In Slaying at Fort Hunt

Private First Class Alexander J. Stevenson, 28, a marine stationed at Quantico, Va., was arrested late yesterday in connection with the slaying January 7 of Sidney M. Little, 28, J. Edgar Hoover, chief of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, announced last night.

He said that Stevenson would be charged with murder at Alexandria today, but would not divulge how the crime was traced to him or where he was being held.

Hoover said Stevenson and Little had known each other "some time." He said other arrests of material witnesses may be made, but only Stevenson is expected to be charged. The Marine is a native of Philadelphia.

Little's body, the head bashed in and the right side of the face crushed, was found in a picnic ground 100 yards from Mount Vernon boulevard, near Fort Hunt, Va. A long strand of light brown hair was clutched in his hand and nearby lay a section of grate from an outdoor cookstove, apparently the lethal weapon.

An autopsy revealed that Little's skull had been fractured in three places, either fracture being held sufficient to cause death. By the body, investigators found a powder puff and several bits of chamois such as is used for cleaning. Later search revealed several dollars and a wrist watch concealed in Little's

IF THIS BE TREASON

PRIZE: Around the White House there's an impish inclination to award Senator Taft the G. O. P. 1940 nomination as that "handsome prize" for his suggestions on budget - balancing. But they fear it might seem ironical.

They cite in proof the feat of a Finnish marksman credited with potting 41 Russians in one skirmish. SWORDFISH TAGGED: The Government's eagle eye has at last fallen on that rugged individualist, the swordfish, and is giving him a number. Fishermen are agreeing to use numbered darts, so if one gets away off Atlantic City and is recaptured off Newport, (a social climber!) Washington will know it.

What he did in the interim Washington won't know. But the fisheries men are pretty pleased to get this help free; it used to cost $35 or $40 to capture, tag and release a swordfish. What's your reaction to this, Senator Taft?

U. S., Canada Experts Agree On Waterway

Engineers in Accord, Delegates to Report To Governments

By the Associated Press

The United States and Canada, through their engineering advisers, have reached "substantial agreement" on a Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway and power development.

The State Department announced last night, at the conclusion of three days of discussions with a Canadian delegation, the talks have reached the point where the two delegations will report to their respective governments on matters of policy.

The two delegations agreed to go back to a plan presented in 1926, involving construction of a waterway 27 feet deep around the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence, construction of a main dam in the vicinity of Barnhart Island, with a powerhouse in each country and a control dam upstream.

Definite Progress Made

Dr. O. D. Skelton, undersecretary of state for external affairs, and his colleagues on the Canadian delegation, left for Ottawa yesterday after the following joint statement was issued:

"During the discussions the whole field was covered, and definite progress was made. The discussions have now reached the point where it is necessary for the two delegations to report to their respective governments on various matters of policy requiring their consideration and decision.

"The engineering advisers of the two governments have reached substantial agreement on the feasibility and desirability of a project in the International Rapids section of the St. Lawrence River which would involve a main dam in the vicinity of Barnhart Island, with a power house in each country, and a control dam upstream. This project is based upon a plan which was discussed in some detail in the 1926 report of the joint board of engineers. The engineers of the two countries are in agreement that such a project is sound from an engineering standpoint, cheaper in cost than the project on which the 1932 treaty was based, and affords full protection for all the interests in the various sections of the St. Lawrence River.

"The negotiations will continue through diplomatic channels."

Standards Bureau Backs Boren Bill To Aid Consumers

In a break from its point of view in previous years, the Bureau of Standards has indorsed the Boren bill that would authorize it to set up performance standards for goods sold to consumers.

Testifying before the House Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee, Bureau Director Lyman J. Briggs asked that his agency be given the task of testing the quality and performance of consumer goods so that manufacturers could inform prospective purchasers that the goods meet requirements established by the Government.

In the past the bureau has been reluctant to engage in this work, testing Government purchases only.

Peek Charges Treaty Makers Dupe Congress

By the Associated Press

George N. Peek, one-time farm administrator and trade adviser in the New Deal, charged yesterday that whoever was responsible for adminstering the reciprocal trade treaty law had practiced fraud and deception upon Congress.

Declaring the act had been used to effect a general tariff reduction, he contended that Congress had had no such purpose in mind when it authorized reciprocal trade agreements with other nations.

Meanwhile, 11 women's organizations meeting here in the annual conference on the Cause and Cure of War adopted a peace program urging renewal of the act.

Peek, former Moline, Ill., farm implement manufacturer who left the Administration in 1935 because of policy differences, made his accusation before the House Ways and Means Committee, which is considering extension of the act. It brought a demand from Chairman Doughton (Democrat), of North Carolina, that the witness specify to whom he referred but Peek did not do so.

"Do you say that Secretary Hull practiced deception and fraud on the Congress?" asked Representative McCormack (Democrat), Massachusetts).

"If he is responsible for the administration of the act," Peek replied.

"Who do you think is responsible for the administration of the act?" McCormack replied.

"Well, it has developed that the names of the so-called experts have been refused, so it is pretty hard to say."

Another witness, John D. Battle, executive secretary of the National Coal Association, advocated cancellation of the trade agreement with Venezuela and termination of the act.

Long Control Of Legislature Is Smashed

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 24.—"Reform" forces of Louisiana hailed today the smashing of the "rubber stamp" Legislature, perennial bulwark for the 12-year rule of Huey Long and his political heirs.

While a last-minute pay check mix-up delayed adjournment of the current administration-dominated Assembly, returns from last week's Democratic primary showed only 25 of 100 present House members and 9 of 39 senators won renomination.

Even a clean sweep for the Longites in the February 20 runoff would leave a majority of new faces in the Assembly meeting three months hence, making it certain Gov. Earl Long would have no docile group of lawmakers if he succeeds in retaining his post against the challenge of "Reform" Candidate Sam H. Jones.

Although called for six days, Gov. Long had said the present special legislative session would end in five days.

Both chambers apparently were prepared for sine die adjournment when leaders found some senators already had cashed checks covering payment for six days' work, and authoritative sources said some were fearful adjournment might render these liable to mail fraud charges, inasmuch as the checks must pass through the mails for collection.

Vinson Seeks To Revise Rules On Arms Fund

Hopes to Overcome Taber Threat to Delay Navy Building Orders

By John G. Norris

House leaders yesterday revealed plans for combatting a serious threat to the national defense program presented by a Republican bloc in Congress.

Chairman Vinson of the House Naval Committee asked Navy officials to prepare an amendment to the pending $800,000,000 fleet expansion bill to authorize orders to be placed for a long range building program of warships and planes without waiting for appropriations.

Congress has been permitting the Army and Navy to proceed with two and three-year arms programs and delaying appropriating for them until deliveries begin. Last week, Representative Taber, of New York, ranking minority member of the House Appropriations Committee, successfully challenged the practice in a test in the House, defeating a $150,000,000 Maritime Commission shipbuilding plan.

Taber says he is going to challenge all similar contractual authority in appropriation bills, and defense leaders are worried. A total of $188,000,000 is provided in the budget in this fashion for the Army and Navy, and his move will mean the items will have to be abandoned or the appropriation bills boosted by that amount.

It also will upset the Navy's plans for letting contracts for entire new shipbuilding program this spring, if Congress will grant $30,000,000 in cash and some $600,000,000 in contract authority.

The "promisory note" plan of deferring appropriations has never been specifically authorized by Congress and Taber's lone objection can defeat the Army and Navy programs at present.

Vinson has suggested that Taber's strategy can be blocked by a clause in the naval expansion bill or by a change in House rules. Majority Leader Rayburn agrees that a special rule on each bill would answer.

Rear Admiral John H. Towers, chief of the Bureau of Aeronautics, told the House Naval Committee yesterday that planes now on order or carried in the budget will raise the Navy's total from 2,150 to 3,200. Some 1,700 others are asked in the pending bill.

U. S.-Industry Cooperation Proposed

By Felix Cotten.
Post Staff Writer

A program of Government cooperation with industry, patterned along the lines of the AAA, and having as its purpose a concerted reduction in prices and expansion of output, was proposed before the Monopoly Committee yesterday by Mordecai Ezekiel, Agriculture Department economic adviser.

He presented the plan as an alternative to public ownership or control of industry. It is a means, he said, whereby concerted action of industry as a whole can be attained through democratic processes and without resort to socialism or fascism.

Ezekiel declared that "if private enterprise is to survive, business must find a way to solve the problem of unemployment and to provide a continuing rise in the standard of living." Reduction in prices and expansion of production, he argued, is the means toward this end.

He appeared before the committee in an attempt to refute statements on behalf of the United States Steel Corporation that a reduction in steel prices would not pay.

The controversy between U. S. Steel experts and New Deal economists over this point resolved into a "battle of polysyllables." The latter were trying to refute statements made by Dr. Theodore O. Yntema, of the University of Chicago, whose study of prices, volume and costs for United States steel were presented to the committee last year. Yntema appeared from time to time in rebuttal.

Ezekiel said Yntema's conclusion that a cut in steel prices would not be profitable was based, among other things, on the assumption that it would have no effect on the general level of business activity.

These conclusions, he declared, are "weaknesses" in Yntema's analysis.

The problem, however, he declared, is much larger than prices and production. Expansion in production and employment, he argued, can be continued and maintained "only if the buying power made available to the workers is increased rapidly enough to assure that consumer demand increases in proper proportion to the increase in output."

Martin Taitel, senior consulting economist of the Works Projects Administration, declared that Yntema's cost analysis was not a description of the price policy followed by U. S. Steel.

Legion Plans Parties to Aid Blood Bank

Post, WJSV Sponsor Campaign; 39 Posts, 17 Auxiliaries Help

At least 25 American Legion posts and auxiliaries are planning to hold card parties St. Valentine's Week for the benefit of the Children's Hospital blood and serum bank, it was announced yesterday.

The Post and Station WJSV are sponsoring the "play for blood" campaign.

W. A. Corley, of the legion's project committee, reported that virtually all of the 39 posts and 17 auxiliary units in the District department have decided to hold games or cooperate with groups that are giving parties.

Sponsoring Units

In addition to those which already have announced their plans, the following posts and units are scheduled to participate in the "Have a Heart" drive:

Washington Police and Fire No. 29, Preston E. Peterson, commander; card party to be held in late February or early March. Committee—Commander Peterson, Clement Murphy, C. E. Ripperberger and, from the auxiliary unit, Mrs. Julia M. Rochford, president, and Mrs. Raymond B. Carroll.

Separate Parties Planned

Treasury Auxiliary Unit No. 35, Mrs. Jessie M. Curran, president; individual members to give separate parties and attend those given by other units.

Internal Revenue No. 30, James W. Yokum, commander; members will attend parties given by other posts and units. Committee—Charles W. Curran, Charles E. Wolfe and Stanley Harman.

Potomac Auxiliary Unit No. 40, Mrs. Vesta L. Rodruck, president; party at Palisade field house on February 16, with Mrs. Rosetta Wells and Mrs. Rodruck in charge.

U. G. McAlexander Post No. 38. Mrs. A. B. Dickerson is chairman of the blood bank party committee, which will sponsor a benefit card party February 17.

Mrs. Landreth Orders 150

A Virginia resident came forward yesterday as one of the biggest boosters reported to date of the Children's Hospital blood and serum bank fund.

Mrs. Robert N. Landreth, of Falls Church, ordered 150 tickets at $1 each to be disposed of at card parties which the committee of which she is chairman is arranging for February 14, all proceeds to go into the "bank" fund.

Simultaneously James H. Lemon, general chairman of The Post-WJSV campaign to expand the "blood bank" facilities with receipts from city-wide Valentine week card parties, reported the scheduling of a benefit bridge at the Chevy Chase Club for February 14.

Mrs. William J. Flather and Mrs. Winslow B. Van Devanter are co-sponsors of the Chevy Chase Club party. Lemon said the Federal Bridge League has definitely decided to hold a "bank" game, the date of which will be announced later.

Other Clubs

Among other clubs which have announced parties are Army and Navy, February 8; University, February 11; Columbia Country, February 12, and Metropolitan, February 15. The Washington Bridge League's party will be at the Hotel Shoreham February 7.

Mrs. Landreth, chairman of the Falls Church committee, is being assisted by Mrs. J. C. McCaskill, co-chairman, and a committee consisting of Mrs. Mason Barr, Mrs. Tage Beck, Mrs. C. M. Bolton, Mrs. L. P. Daniel, Mrs. Harry A. Fellows, Mrs. T. P. Grubb, Mrs. Felix Moore, Mrs. W. H. Oakey, jr., Mrs. Lee I. Park and Mrs. P. M. Talbott.

Mrs. Landreth announced that the afternoon game on February 14 will be played at the home of Mrs. J. W. Brown. Hostesses at evening parties will be Mrs. Mason Barr, Mrs. Melton Eisenhower, Mrs. Charles Pendleton and Mrs. Robert N. Landreth.

Write Post for Tickets

The American Contract Bridge League, national sponsor, The Post and Station WJSV invite all individuals and organizations wishing to sponsor benefit card parties for the Children's Hospital blood and serum bank to write for tickets to The Washington Post.

Money may be sent in advance, accompanying the order, or after the parties have been held and the $1 per ticket collected from the guests.

All receipts will be turned over to Children's Hospital, for the continuation and improvement of its blood and serum bank which was established last year with funds raised by the benefit parties.

bugler was a colorful figure in the historic blue uniform of a hundred years ago, when his unit, now the Third Cavalry was called "The Brave Rifles." From his brightly polished bugle swung a most effective tabard of gold satin and fringe.

Through nearly three hours the audience was treated to a performance of excellent riding, showing and jumping, which ended with the spectacular exhibition ride of Company E, Third Cavalry, and the cowboy exhibition ride of Company F of the same unit.

A high point during the early part of the evening came when Miss Patricia Henry, daughter of the former Chief of Cavalry Maj. Guy V. Henry and Mrs. Henry, won the first event, the Green Hunters Class, riding her father's horse, Gabby's Scamp. Her mother, on hand to see her, presented her daughter with the trophy. Gen. Henry, ill with the grip, was unable to attend.

Headed by Commissioner Melvin C. Hazen, general chairman of the President's Birthday celebration committee, prominent names, filled the boxes and the area "down front." With Commissioner Hazen in the commandant's box, were Col. and Mrs. Berkeley T. Merchant, and the commandant of Fort Myer, Col. George S. Patton, jr., and Mrs. Patton.

Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Morris entertained a party which included Senora de Cabero, wife of the Chilean Ambassador; the Minister of Nicaragua, Dr. Leon De Bayle, and Senora de De Bayle.

Sharing honors with Gene Autry and another movie star, Judy Canova, was Miss Mary Howard, the "Ann Rutledge" of the Abe Lincoln film appearing here this week. Miss Howard was a guest of Maj. Gen. Albert L. Cox, as were her mother, Mrs. Florence Howard, and her sister, Miss Meredith Howard. Also noted were "Liz" Whitney, Miss Nancy Leiter, Harold Fangboner, and Mr. and Mrs. Gale McLean.

Fashion Note. Miss Howard, who wore formal evening attire (costumes varied from sports apparel to full evening dress), was gowned in pale mauve chiffon, made long and flowing with a slight train. With it she wore a short ermine cape and long white kid gloves. From the sleeve of her wrap peeked a sweater sleeve of fine white wool, showing she was taking no chances with Washington's unusual weather."

High lights of the evening's performance included an impromptu circus performance put on by Fred Hughes on his mount, Black Caddy, who was feeling temperamental about the jumps and refusing to take them. After bucking, rearing and doing all but a handstand for a cheering audience, horse and rider were disqualified from the event.

A game little rider was Miss Lisbeth Steig, riding Hi Ho. Last week she had a tooth extracted, has been in bed sick ever since, still has a jaw swollen to twice its normal size, but rode anyway and won a big hand for her pluck.

In the exhibitor's box at one side of the vast tan bark floored brick riding hall was one spectator to whom the event meant particularly much. She was Miss Margaret Cotter, and this is the first President's Birthday Horseshow in which she has not participated. A spinal injury, necessitating an operation last Thanksgiving, has kept her from riding but nothing could keep her from seeing the show and cheering on her friends and former riding companions.

Col. Patton, commandant of the post, won a big hand when he entered the ring on his Hawaiian mount, Konohiki. Miss Ann Hughes caused gasps then cheers from the audience, when her horse ran into and knocked over a hurdle but didn't unseat her.

Perhaps the strangest reason to keep a prospective rider from entry in the show was the acident to Mrs. George P. Greenhalgh. Yesterday she sent up three horses for entry, intending to ride one or all. In the afternon, while frisking with some young puppies on her estate, one reached out to claw her. Fearing he would tear a run in her hose, she reached down suddenly to catch him and — dislocated her sacroiliac bone.

Hard-riding exhibition work is everyday stuff and routine for the members of the post at Fort Myer, but their final cowboy scene carries more thrills and chills than all circus and Wild West shows put together. Starting with a tearing ride into the ring, shrieking cowboys shot large balloons from the rafters.

Dog Sled Good For Getting to Work on Time

Clerk Finds Byrd's Training Helpful in Reaching Office

The only Government employe to arrive at his desk less than three hours late yesterday told The Post, "I consider the time spent coming to work this morning the most wonderful hours of my life."

The record-holder, Rutching L. McFustian, senior wiper in the Bureau of Wax, Fats and Oils, made his dash from Falls Church to Thirteen and One-Half street in 12 hours and 37 minutes flat. He confessed, however, that he had been preparing for several weeks beforehand, acting on information received confidentially.

He declined to reveal the source of his cold tip, except to intimate that he knew of a leak in the Weather Bureau.

He said that two weeks ago he began thawing out an adequate supply of pemmican and car tokens. He began the actual journey at 10 p. m. Tuesday.

"I negotiated the first few legs by dog sled to the bus line with no difficulty," McFustian said, "using a few old treks I learned from Admiral Byrd.

"I anticipated trouble in getting a bus to stop," he continued, "and, after watching two or three hundred pass by, I concluded that the bus man will always win.

"So, I felled a few sycamores and birches across the road and was easily able to climb aboard the next lorry that came along. The conductor was somewhat miffed at the two or three hours' delay caused by having to clear the road, because at that time he still was reckoning in terms of hours. Some months later—I think we were about midway across Key Bridge—I confessed that I had chopped the trees down and he forgave me readily. After all, by that time we had been through so much together on the frozen wastes——" McFustian's voice had a catch in it.

"The first part of the bus ride passed pleasantly enough, with chess tournaments, amateur dramatics, gladsome games of post-office and a rather creditable piece of astronomical research.

"Early Wednesday morning we saw the welcome sight of Key Bridge loom up ahead of us.

"I can never forget the trip across the bridge—the deadly waits, when all was silence and no living thing was moving, then the feverish preparations, the hopeful anticipation, the mad joy at the careening plunge as we moved four, or sometimes even five, inches nearer our destination.

"Yes, we finally got to M street, although, of course, many of our party had fallen by the way. At Wisconsin avenue one of the passengers, a minister, performed a marriage for two of the younger travelers, who had coo-ed to each other from their parents' arms at Cherrydale, become childhood playmates en route, and had fallen in love when they reached maturity.

"All in all, it was a wonderful decade. There was only one small disappointment at the end. I had been planning to appear in a legal case, but when I arrived today, it had been thrown out of court. The time limit had expired under the statute of limitations.

Symphony Funds Drive Called Off, Volunteers Told

Team captains who would have directed 700 volunteer workers in the National Symphony Orchestra fund-raising campaign were notified officially yesterday that no campaign will be held this year, L. Corrin Strong, president of the orchestra association, said.

The board of directors of the Musicians Protective Union, Local No. 161, met at headquarters during the day and discussed the impasse brought about by the musicians' demand for salary increases, but took no action. The orchestra is away from Washington and is not expected back before Tuesday.

that stood 18 to 20 inches on the flats and 6 to 8 feet in drifts.

Side roads were impassable and the only main highway in or out of the county from Mechanicsville, 15 miles north of Leonardtown, to Point Lookout at the southern tip of the county, was closed when the last of the county's snowplows broke down at 11 p. m. Tuesday.

Grace Knight, county Red Cross chairman, said the snow was deepest on record. Deliveries of food and mail were impossible.

The situation in Calvert and Anne Arundel counties was similar. All main Calvert roads were closed. The Solomon's Island road was impassable below Prince Frederick.

In the Maryland and Virginia counties adjoining Washington main roads were open, but side roads were impassable. Prince Georges and Montgomery counties in nearby Maryland and Fairfax County, in Virginia, closed public schools at noon. In Arlington County, Va., the school were open, but attendance was only 60 per cent.

Steamer Calls for Help

The Ocean Steamship Co.'s City of Savannah, a passenger liner bound from Southern ports to Boston, reported her rudder post carried away and called for help. A Coast Guard cutter and a salvage vessel were speeding to her position 35 miles southwest of Diamond Shoals, where she was hove to. The Chesapeake Line steamer City of Norfolk, due at Baltimore at 6:30 a. m. yesterday, docked at 9 p. m. after riding out the storm at anchor off Hooper's Island.

The same high winds drove the 330-ton freighter Lillian Ann, of Norfolk, aground off Hooper's Island. Her skipper, Capt. S. Crain, radioed Capt. R. W. Gatewood, her owner, she was resting easily, in no danger, and her crew of nine had plenty of food and comfortable quarters.

Meanwhile the Coast Guard rushed aid to several vessels battered by high seas and winds. The steamship Karmoy messaged from a position 20 miles south of Chesapeake lightship: "Mountainous seas steering badly . . . may not be able to make it."

Tanker in Distress

Another cutter, the Mendota, is proceeding to the aid of the 7,115-ton tanker Albert Hill which reported that her steering gear had broken approximately 150 miles southeast of Norfolk.

The Tug Clara L. Hudgins is being escorted into the Virginia Capes by the cutter Dione.

The Chesapeake lightship was torn from her moorings and drifted about 5 or 6 miles.

While the South was swept by the worst winter weather in years, the North and East escaped comparatively untouched, with temperatures rising in some cases.

At Richmond, citizens walked to work when all transportation systems went to pieces, the Associated Press reported, and South Boston, Va., with a 21-inch snowfall, saw the roof of its armory collapse with a loss of approximately $5,000. An airplane hangar at Fredericksburg, Va., gave way under its burden of snow, damaging three planes.

21.7 Inches at Danville

Danville's 21.7-inch fall was termed the heaviest in 40 years and Richmond's 16 inches was the heaviest since 1908. Gales reaching 50 miles an hour lashed the Virginia coast.

Lower Delaware was smothered under 17 inches of snow and 15 inches fell in southwest Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia all felt the frigid hand of winter, Atlanta reported a record, 10.3 inches; 10 inches fell at Jackson, Miss., and Biloxi, Miss., feared a fuel shortage.

The Midwest struggled with sub-zero temperatures with even lower depths predicted for today.

Nazis Taking Over Pathway To Rumania

Galicia Reported Given By Russia for Pledge Of Support in North

By P. J. Philip

Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Jan. 24.—German infiltration into Galicia, according to reports here, has begun to assume the proportions of occupation and a common frontier has been established in fact between Germany and Rumania.

This infiltration began with detachments of engineers and guards sent to protect trains coming from Rumania through Russian-occupied Poland.

These guards have now, it is confirmed, been so increased in number that the country can be considered as occupied by German and not any longer by Russian troops.

Clear Road to Oil

The German advance into Galicia at least secures an uninterrupted supply of wheat and oil from Rumania if the Rumanians agree and a possibility of much more easy pressure if they do not agree.

Little is known here as to the terms of the agreement, if there is any, which Russia has made permitting this occupation of Polish territory assigned to her last October. However, it is apparent that weakness of the Russian diplomatic position is consequent on the check of the Soviet armies in Finland, which enabled German negotiators to obtain something concrete in return for a promise which can be withdrawn in future in the Hitlerian manner if desirable.

That something concrete is reported to consist of Russian assent to exploitation of the Galician oil fields by Germany for 99 years; exploitation of railroads in the district so as to assure the transport of oil from Rumania; concession of the manganese mines of Krivoi and Rog, and a concession for exploitation and organization of other resources with the right of transit across Russian territory.

In exchange Germany seems to have made, first, certain promises with regard to her attitude toward Finland and the Scandinavian states, principally that she would intervene at once if France or Great Britain tried either directly or through Norway or Sweden to help Finland, and second, that she would send immediately experts to organize Russian transport and arms production and even military technicians.

Rumania Denies Yielding

Bucharest, Jan. 24 (INS).—The Rumanian government tonight through a spokesman denied that a recent decree placing the oil industry under a form of dictatorship means an increase in oil exports to Germany.

"It is not the intention of the Rumanian government to favor Germany or any other power," a spokesman said.

Lake Muola, but, as so often before, when they approached the Finnish advance positions they encountered intense machine gun fire that forced back those who survived.

Finnish artillery is reported to have destroyed several more Russian batteries and machine gun nests facing the Mannerheim Line.

The third major action of the day occurred about 65 miles north of Lake Ladoga at Aittojoki, where another large Russian force, after heavy artillery preparation, attempted to advance, duplicating an action that had failed yesterday. The Soviet attackers were repulsed.

The situation at Salla, the northernmost front on the eastern frontier, remains cloaked in secrecy by Finnish censorship. It is agreed here, however, that a decisive battle up there is almost certain in the next month.

Bombs Sink Steamer

Helsinki (Thursday), Jan. 25 (AP).—Soviet bombers, swarming again over Finland, yesterday sank a Finnish ship with a shower of bombs in the Aaland Archipelago and tried to bomb a German vessel.

Dumping 10 or 15 bombs, the planes sank the 1,133-ton Notung, of Finnish registry, at Sottunja, a small island in the eastern part of the archipelago. Other bombs barely missed a German ship, unnamed in dispatches reaching here, which had run aground nearby.

Downs Six Planes

Helsinki, Jan. 24 (INS).—The remarkable exploits of a Finnish airman who reportedly shot down six out of seven Russian bombers single-handed, and a Swedish volunteer pilot who said he helped bomb several Murmansk Railway bridges, caused nationwide sensations in Finland today.

The Finnish pilot, who used a modern pursuit plane, was Lieut. Jorma Sarvanto. His feat was accomplished yesterday in an unidentified sector, according to officials in Helsinki.

The Swede, Matti Sundsteen, returned to the Finnish lines on skis from territory deep in Soviet Russia after taking part in the aerial bombardment of the railway bridges. He said he was the only survivor of the crews of two Finnish planes which, after accomplishing their mission, collided in the air.

Nothing Binds Them to Allies, Dutch Declare

All Parties Reject United Front; British Aims Called Selfish

By the Associated Press

The Hague, Jan. 24.—Representatives of all parties tonight rejected, during a foreign affairs debate in the Netherlands first chamber, the thesis of Winston Churchill that the collective safety of Europe's small neutrals lies in "united action" with Great Britain and France.

The British first lord of the admiralty advanced this thesis in a radio speech last Saturday night.

Today's Dutch speakers voiced approval of the neutral foreign policy of Foreign Minister Van Kleffens, who will close the debate tomorrow. Churchill's speech was assailed vigorously, and unswerving neutrality was applauded as the only course for Holland.

Responsibility Disclaimed

"Holland has a moral right to neutrality and has nothing to do with endeavors like those of Churchill to draw us into battles for which we have not a single responsibility," declared Prof. B. de Savornin Lohman, member of the Christian Historical Party of Premier Jen de Geer.

Britain and France, not the neutrals, "have killed collective security," said Lohman. He suggested, also, that the Netherlands stay aloof from Russia and the League of Nations.

Members of the Catholic Party asked why Churchill had addressed himself to small European neutrals instead of to the United States, Italy and Japan.

One speaker contended neutrals, en bloc, should refuse to cooperate in any projected international organization for settlement of European problems after hostilities cease.

Both Prime Minister Chamberlain of Great Britain and Premier Daladier of France have spoken hopefully of some sort of a united states of Europe after the war is over.

Holds British Aims Selfish

A Calvinist Party speaker declared: "The argument of Churchill that neutrals have to fight lacks any real force."

"The war," he continued, "was not begun in the interest of civilization, of the rights and for small nations, but for a particular purpose. England and France are not fighting for the Jews, or for Ethiopia, Albania, Austria or Czecho-Slovakia. Neither is England fighting for Poland, but for her own vital rights. Therefore there is no grounds for asking Holland and other neutrals to go into the war.

"This, of course, does not mean that the neutrals have no interest in the result of the war."

One of the four National Socialist (Nazi) members of the chamber, Van Nessen, demanded that the Netherlands withdraw from the League.

Committee Passes Loan to Finland

war" in the President's 1939 Neutrality act proclamation.

A further restriction prohibited any loans by the bank in violation of the State Department's interpretation of internatiqnal law.

An effort by Senator Bankhead (Democrat), of Alabama to block direct or indirect loans by the bank to any foreign Government was overwhelmingly defeated, as was an attempt by Danaher to ban direct loans to a foreign Government as such.

10 Million Already Granted

Federal Loan Administrator Jones told reporters that if the bill is passed "I would regard it as leaving the matter of any further aid to Finland up to administrative agencies." He said he did not consider that the measure "directed" such a loan. The Export-Import Bank already has granted a $10,000,000 trade credits to Finland, of which only $500,000 has been disbursed.

The $30,000,000 over-all limit in the bill on loans to any one country would permit up to $20,000,000 more in further advances to the Finns. State Department spokesmen advised the committee that a loan to Finland would not violate international law. Loans already made by the bank forbid purchase of military articles.

The approved measure represented a drastic modification of the original bill by Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, to authorize a $60,000,000 governmental loan to Finland, without any strings attached. Brown worked out the compromise in a series of week-end conferences with Administration officials, and the committee added further restrictions.

Brown predicted the bill in its revised form would be passed by the Senate. Despite careful avoidance of any mention of Finland in the measure, the Michigan Democrat said he thought Jones would understand that "Congress wants to make a loan to Finland if it is safe to do so."

Limitation of the bill strictly to an Export-Import Bank lending expansion would have obviated the need of consideration by Senate Foreign Relations Committee were it not for a Senate agreement last week to submit any action taken in the matter by the banking group to the other committee.

Chairman Pittman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee was reported to favor the modified measure. Senator George (Democrat), of Georgia, another member of that group, recently assailed in the Senate any move for a military loan to Finland. He said yesterday he did not oppose food, clothes and medical supplies for the embattled republic, but thought they should be outright gifts.

Without relation to Finland, a $100,000,000 increase in Export-Import bank lending authority was sought last session by Jones, chiefly to continue Latin-American trade loans. It failed of enactment.

Taft said a $50,000,000 increase in the bank's revolving fund should be sufficient, and should be used for Finland alone.

Chamberlain Evades Soviet Break Query

Matter Would Take Grave Consideration, Premier Answers

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 24.—Prime Minister Chamberlain, avoiding a stand on the subject of a break with Russia, told the House of Commons today Great Britain was ready at any time to fulfill its pledges to Belgium.

Reviewing treaties and declarations from the signing of the treaty of Locarno in 1925 to August 27, a few days before Germany invaded Poland, Chamberlain said Britain had undertaken "to go to the immediate assistance of Belgium in the event of unprovoked aggression by Germany."

Under these pledges the British government retains the right to decide what constitutes aggression or threatened attack.

Chamberlain avoided a direct reply when asked whether Britain would break off relations with Russia. Such a move, he said, "would require most careful consideration in all its aspects."

(In Brussels, the Belgian military expert, Col. Requette, wrote in the newspaper Independance Belge that "it is easily realized . . . that the best Easter present which Germany might give to the French generals and British admirals would be an attack on Belgium." The British and French flank, he said, "lies neither in Belgium nor Switzerland but farther to the north and south of Europe and on the sea.")

Chamberlain assured the House that British recognized and had diplomatic relations only with Generalissimo Chiang Kai-shek's government of China.

British Seize Maps Sent to Nazis From U.S.

Cash, Jewels, Food Among Contraband Found in Mails

By the United Press

London, Jan. 24.—Maps of "potential military value" are being sent to Germany by Nazi sympathizers in the United States, the ministry of economic warfare alleged tonight in justification of the interception of American mails by the contraband control.

Great Britain last week rejected the United States protest against interference with mail bound for neutral countries and claimed to have given Washington evidence of "organized traffic in contraband on considerable scale" between the United States and Germany.

A spokesman gave American correspondents detailed figures indicating that large amounts of money, diamonds, pearls and other valuables destined for Germany have been found in American letters and parcels.

He also charged that shipments of food to Germany by German firms in the United States had reached the proportions of a "racket" and that the Germans were profiteering at the expense of United States residents contributing money to buy food parcels for relatives and friends in the Reich.

The spokesman was reluctant to go into details regarding the "military maps," but said:

"They are quite important maps of European and non-European places and, for the most part, are mostly published maps with a number of markings which in certain circumstances might be of considerable military value."

Supporting the charge that German sympathizers in the United States have been sending substantial amounts of contraband, the spokesman produced advertisements appearing in German-American newspapers.

American Cheated

In these advertisements banks and other companies offered to send food packages, so-called "gift marks" and other payment orders to Germany.

These banks and companies, according to the advertisements, are located in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, St. Louis, Milwaukee, Cincinnati, Pittsburgh, Philadelphia and other cities.

British officials said it had been revealed that, in many instances, American residents sending food parcels to Germany were being cheated. Of the $8 which many of them are compelled to pay for the parcels, it was said, only $1.50 is spent for food in Holland and the other $6.50 remains in the United States to build up a German war chest on deposit there.

"The purpose is less to feed the German people than to collect foreign exchange in the United States, which Germany badly needs," the spokesman said.

Japanese Press Attacks U. S. and England

By the United Press

Tokyo (Thursday), Jan. 25.—Newspapers today attacked the United States and Great Britain, accusing Washington of a concerted effort to wreck Japan's program for creation of a "new order in East Asia" and London of "piracy" because of the seizure last Sunday of 21 German merchant seamen who were passengers on the Japanese liner Asama Maru.

Britain came in for the bulk of public resentment and there was every tindication of a recrudescence of the anti-British movement which swept the empire and Japanese-controlled areas of China last summer.

Among officials and business leaders, however, resentment against the United States, because of Washington's refusal to accept Japan's plea for a working agreement to replace the expiring Japanese-American Treaty, which dies Friday, was much keener than against Britain.

Officials said in private conversation that President Roosevelt's action in abrogating the commercial treaty was a political move involving the most serious potential consequences.

There was a noticeable swing in opinion toward friendship for Germany.

It was understood that a move for last-minute conversations here between Foreign Minister Arita and Ambassador Grew was abandoned after Ambassador Horinouchi had been told by the State Department in Washington that no "stop-gap" arrangement was desired by the United States.

Arita told members of the lower House of Parliament yesterday that no obstacles to normal Japanese-American trade were expected.

Concerning the British, the chief spokesman for the navy ministry said that "the navy is making preparations to prevent a recurrence in future of such incidents as the searching of the Asama Maru." He said it would be premature to reveal the nature of these preparations.

Government Concerned

Copyright by New York Times

Tokyo, Jan. 24.—With patriotic bodies continuing to demonstrate against Great Britain for interception of the Asama Maru and the removal of 21 German seamen, the government is today acutely concerned over the risks of British interference with other Japanese vessels carrying German nationals.

Reports from London suggested the British consider the Asama Maru incident a relatively small matter and failed to realize how seriously Japanese sentiment had been aroused. The fact that the foreign office made representations tot he British Embassy twice in one day shows how seriously the Japanese view the situation.

Reports the Tatuta Maru was stopped and searched yesterday off Honolulu added fuel to the flames for several hours and only late radio listeners knew the reports had been exaggerated.

Gude Funeral Service Is Set For Tomorrow

Rites Will Be Held In St. Paul's; Burial In Rock Creek Cemetery

Funeral services will be held tomorrow for William F. Gude, 72, president of the Gude Brothers Co., one of Washington's largest florist firms. Mr. Gude died Tuesday night at his home, Winterburn Farm, near Laurel, Md.

Services will be held at 11 a. m. in St. Paul's Episcopal Church. Interment will be in Rock Creek Cemetery.

Mr. Gude had been in business here for more than 50 years. He took an active interest in local civic affairs and during the Harding Administration served as rent commissioner. He was a native of Lynchburg, Va., but was taken to Prince Georges County, Md., when he was 2.

Started as Florist at 10

His career as a florist started when he was 10 years old. He went to work for an Anacostia florist and continued to work while attending the old Spencerian Business College. With his brother, the late Adolph Gude, he started a business of his own when 21.

The first Gude florist store was opened in the old Center Market. The brothers borrowed $30 to start. They moved to the 900 block of F street nrthwest and erected three greenhouses in Anacostia.

It was William Gude who developed the Red Radiance Rose, an outgrowth of the Pink Radiance and his discovery was honored by the Society of American Florists and Order of Horticulturists. He was made president of the organization.

On Inaugural Committees

During his early life in Washington, Mr. Gude served on several inaugural committees. His first was the inaugural commitee of President Grover Cleveland. He held membership in the Rotary Club, National Press Club, City Club, Old Colony Club, the Petworth Citizens Association and the Association of Oldest Inhabitants.

Mr. Gude also was a member of several florist organizations, including the American Carnation Society, American Rose Society, American Dahlia Society, National Gardeners Association, Tennessee State Florists Association, Society of American Florists and Ornamental Horticulturists (past president).

Mr. Gude also was active in local Masonic and fraternal organizations. He was at one time treasurer of the Grand Commandery of the District of Columbia and eminent commander of De Molay Commandery, Knights Templar. He was a Shriner, a thirty-third degree Scottish Rite Mason, a member of the Royal Order of Scotland and the order of the Eastern Star.

Surviving Mr. Gude are his wife, Mrs. Katherine Loeffler Gude; two sons, Frederick Granville and Ernest Gude, three daughters, Mrs. Amelia Thomas, Mrs. Wilhelmina Hussey and Mrs. Louise Davis.

Roosevelt Broke Faith, Lewis Says

"furnished money, speakers, party workers and . . . many millions of votes" in the 1936 campaign.

The C. I. O. head declared that in the last three years labor had not been given representation in the administrative or policy-making agencies of the Administration; that the advice of labor on vital questions had not been seriously entertained; that labor now has no contact with the Administration except for casual interviews with leaders, and that:

"In the Congress, the unrestrained baiting and defaming of labor by the Democratic majority has become a pastime, never subject to rebuke by the titutlar or actual leaders of the party."

Criticizing the Democratic Administration's record, Lewis said after seven years in power it has found no solution for such major problems as unemployment, low national income, and increasing debt and taxation.

"There still exists," he remarked, "the same national unhappiness that it faced seven years ago."

Lewis, in a second speech assailed the U. S. Bureau of Mines, declaring "it has not made a single contribution toward lessening the casualties of the coal industry," but instead has "helped the operators avoid reducing their casualty rolls."

He demanded that Congress complete enactment of a pending bill which would require Federal inspectors to examine mines and publish their findings and the convention unanimously adopted its officers' report urging reorganization of the Bureau of Mines.

It also approved another report asking Congress to relieve the coal industry of the ill effects of trade agreements.

Lewis today personally stopped debate on a controversial autonomy issue. Delegates then voted continuation of a policy under which all districts are governed by the international board.

Wheeler Disputes Breach of Faith

By the Associated Press

Senator Wheeler (Democrat), of Montana, declared here yesterday that it "would be extremely difficult" for the Democratic Party to reelect President Roosevelt, but disputed a claim by John L. Lewis, C. I. O. leader, that the Democratic Party and the Roosevelt Administration had not "kept faith with labor."

"The Democratic Party and President Roosevelt," he said, "have done more for organized labor in recent years than any Administration in the history of the country."

Commenting on another term for Mr. Roosevelt, he said he had "always been opposed to a third term."

Political leaders were quick to see in the Lewis maneuver, including his attack on Administration labor policies, a bid for an influential place in Democratic councils with a view to helping shape party policy and select its Presidential nominee.

However, some of his own C. I. O. organizations already have indorsed another term for Mr. Roosevelt. C. I. O. headquarters list them as the Textile Workers Union of America, the Amalgamated Clothing Workers of America, and the American Federation of Hosiery Workers.

Likewise information at C. I. O. headquarters was that the New York State Industrial Council, representing an estimated 500,000 C. I. O. members, and the New Jersey Council, representing an estimated 200,000, have voted in conventions their indorsement of a third term.

Whether Lewis' first choice for the Democratic standard bearer might be Senator Wheeler has been a subject of speculation ever since the C. I. O. leader several weeks ago invited the Montana Senator to address the Columbus convention tomorrow.

When Stephen Early, Presidential secretary, was advised of the Lewis statement he merely remarked to reporters:

"On the other side of labor we see Mr. Green (William Green, president of the American Federation of Labor) coming in here and doing a very nice thing."

He referred to arrangements for labor to present a birthday cake to Mr. Roosevelt along with nearly $6,000 in contributions from A. F. of L. members for the national infantile paralysis campaign.

Reunion With Union Veterans Unlikely, Says Gray Leader

Maj. Peter Pierre Smith (left), 95-year-old Confederate veteran, of 4830 Sixteenth street northwest, and Gene Julius Franklin Howell, 94, national commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans, of Bristol, Va.

Gen. Howell, Commander in Chief, Believes 'Too Many Amongst Us—On Both Sides—Like To Pop Off' and Feelings Would Be Hurt

In spite of all the sentimental arguments in its favor, a joint reunion of the boys in Blue and Gray is not likely this summer, or any other summer, Gen. Julius Franklin Howell, national commander in chief of the United Confederate Veterans, said yesterday.

"It's like this," explained the sprightly 94-year-old veteran from Bristol, Va., who is in Washington to see the sights, "there are too many amongst us—on both sides—who like to pop off about our heroes.

"A Gray'd get up and give a yell for Jefferson Davis or Gen. Robert E. Lee, and the Yanks wouldn't like that. Or a Yank would shout the glory of Lincoln or Grant, which some of us Grays might resent. Personally, I don't object to a joint reunion, but I'm afraid a lot of the boys would have their feelings hurt."

The interview of Gen. Howell took place in the office of Carter T. Barron, Loew's zone director and a Georgian, in the Capitol Theater shortly after the land's No. 1 Confederate had had a chat with the President.

"I told Mr. Roosevelt I've voted for every Democratic candidate for President since 1868," said Gen. Howell, sipping a bourbon highball, "with one exception. That was Al Smith in 1928. I said I couldn't stomach Al, which made the President laugh, but he said something complimentary about Mr. Smith.

"I sure hated to vote against Joe Robinson, Smith's running mate, because Joe was a student of mine when I taught history at the University of Arkansas."

Next big events on the general's calendar are going down to Union Station Friday to greet Olivia DeHavilland, film star, and attending the premiere of "Gone With the Wind" that night.

With the general was a spirited, if somewhat enfeebled, comrade in gray—Maj. Peter Pierre Smith, 95, of 430 Sixteenth street northwest, who was wounded at Gettysburg. Maj. Smith viewed the "Gone With the Wind" premiere in New York the other day and pronounced it "a fine picture, one that made me live my army days over again."

Each of the two old soldiers served about three years in the Civil War, Gen. Howell with the Twenty-fourth Virginia Cavalry and Maj. Smith with the Second Maryland Infantry.

international efforts to maintain a just and permanent peace."

Promotion of "inter-American solidarity through cooperation in cultural, economic and political fields."

"Cooperation in humanitarian efforts, both governmental and private, to alleviate the suffering of victims of persecution, war and forced migrations.

"Governmental action for financial and economic aid to nations victims of aggression."

Creation of a joint Congressional-executive-civilian national defense commission to integrate foreign and national defense policies and to serve as a medium to supply the public with adequate information.

Last on the program, and loudly applauded, was Mrs. Carrie Chapman Catt, 81 years old and one of the founders of the conference.

An idea, she said, is all that is needed to stop war, an idea such as two queens in Sumatra had 700 years ago, when they agreed to settle a dispute between their tribes on the outcome of a fight between two bullocks. There hasn't been a war between the tribes since, she went on, and descendants of the queens can't remember what their forefathers were fighting about.

"I, for one, am tired of all this talk of causes—the real cause of war is the instinct of the wild beast," she declared, then asked:

"Have any of you sat down and tried to think up an idea that will stab at the very heart of war? If you haven't, I suggest you do, and if you get an idea, bring it to our congress this year (the Women's Centennial Congress in observance of the 100-year fight for women's rights November 25 in New York).

Yes, there will be a prize. It will be immortality."

Mrs. Roosevelt found hope in the Nation's youth. Equip the next generation, she said, to face the problems of democracy and a beginning will have been made to "an understanding among nations." Teach them art, she urged, because "art transcends nationalities."

Medical Society Indorses Ruhland

"deserves the strong support of the medical profession and the citizens of the District of Columbia."

Dr. Copeland's public policy committee expressed the suspicion that, while section 209 of the reorganization bill provides that the health officer chosen from Federal ranks shall be responsible to the District Commissioners, the fact that he would be appointed by the President would make the post a Federal one.

"It is the belief of your committee," said Dr. Copeland's report, "that the present organization of the District Health Department should in no wise be jeopardized. The department, in the opinion of the committee, will best serve the people of the District if it retains its present independent status.

"The committee, therefore, recommends that this section of the bill be vigorously opposed as not being in the public interest."

In behalf of the executive board, Chairman McGovern informed the 200 physicians present at last night's meeting that recommendations of both committees were praiseworthy and urged particularly that federalization of the Health Department "should be combated with all means at the society's command."

The resolution, adopted unanimously, pointed out that Dr. Ruhland was selected for the District health post only after careful consideration, and that the medical society has never had occasion to question his competency.

"Be is resolved," it concluded, "that the Medical Society of the District of Columbia opposes any method of selecting or appointing a health officer for the District of Columbia which violates the principle that he should be a representative of and primarily responsible to the citizens of the District of Columbia.

"And be it further resolved, that on the basis of his record and accomplishments, Dr. George C. Ruhland should be retained as health officer and given the indorsement of the Medical Society of the District of Columbia."

Other members of the executive board, besides Dr. McGovern, are Drs. Thomas E. Neill, Don Johnson, Daniel L. Borden (president-elect), William J. Mallory, John H. Lyons (president), H. C. Macatee and Mr. Theodore Wiprud, secretary.

In "Happy Days" published last Monday, a mellowed Mencken writes the record not only of the first twelve years of his life, but also of an era now fast fading into the shadows of history. Even the once-caustic Mr. Mencken has succumbed to the current interest in America's immediate past, and has produced, in this latest work, a nostalgic record of that period from 1880 to 1892, when he was enjoying and enduring the process of growing-up. Although the book covers only the early part of the author's life, his adult reminiscences of that period have a fine flavor which reconstructs a past with body and spirit. Olivia De Havilland Is To Keep Year-Old Date

Coming to Capital for Birthday Celebrations; Two Stirring Pictures Are Previewed; This, That and the Other About the Theater

OLIVIA DE HAVILLAND has got her wish. She will be present in Washington in person as one of the visiting Hollywood stars participating in the President's Birthday celebration on January 30, according to word announced by Andrew R. Kelly, chairman of the entertainment committee, late yesterday.

It will have taken Miss De Havilland, one of the cinema's most accomplished young actresses, a full 12 months to get here. Last year, she was the first to pledge her presence in the Capital for the same illustrious occasion—and the first to withdraw, through no fault of her own. It was just then that she was selected by David O. Selznick—on loan from the Warner Brothers—for the role of Melanie, one of the most important characters in the film version of Margaret Mitchell's "Gone With the Wind," opening tomorrow morning on the screen at Loew's Palace Theater. Miss De Havilland was completely in the hands of her new bosses and no amount of writing, telegraphing and long-distance telephoning could prevail upon them to release her for the Washington visit, to serve the worthiest of causes.

BELL

The disappointing business did not end there. When "Jock" Whitney's special train bearing all those celebrities to New York from the Atlanta premiere of "Gone With the Wind," stopped over here for a couple of midnight hours, both Mr. Selznick and Miss De Havilland were reminded of their year-old recalcitrance. Mr. Selznick's defense was one of necessity; Miss De Havilland's one merely of regret that embodied the hope that she would be able to make it this time.

So here she comes, probably with her fingers crossed, lest history repeat itself—which, at the moment, seems to be a highly unlikely contingency. Perhaps now she will have that opportunity to see more of Washington than she was able to glimpse in that fast automobile dash from the Lincoln Memorial to the Supreme Court Building in those early morning hours a month or so ago.

A still later flash is to the effect that James Cagney and Pat O'Brien, the Private Jerry Plunkett and Father Duffy, respectively, of "The Fighting 69th," opening tomorrow at the Earle, also will be here for the birthday celebrations, thus swelling the number of Hollywood stars to a genuinely notable group. Neither Jimmy nor Pat is a stranger to the National Capital. Both have been seen for a week of personal appearances at the Earle—but not together—and both have slipped through town numerous other times when the public knew nothing about it. Now let's see. So far, altogether, that makes Gene Autry, "Bill" Boyd, Dorothy Lamour, Brenda Joyce, Tyrone Power, Edward G. Robinson, Mickey Rooney, Olivia De Havilland, James Cagney, Pat O'Brien, Walter O'Keefe and Kay Kyser. It is a probability that Mrs. "Bill" Boyd (the beautiful Grace Bradley) will accompany her husband. And there are still more to come—or so I hear.

Speaking of "The Fighting 69th"—previewed yesterday afternoon—there is enough violent action in this all-masculine film to blast an audience right out of its chairs. There is also appended to the final footage of the picture a plea for peace that ought to leave something to think about in every intelligent mind after all the bloody horror of armed conflict that has preceded it.

There is a dash of war and its evil consequences, too, in "Balalaika," coming to the screen at Loew's Capitol tomorrow. This, however, has to do with the "White Russia" of the czars and doesn't strike quite so near home as the saga of the 165th Company of Infantry in the Rainbow Division of the A. E. F. And besides that, "Balalaika," like the Russian triangular mandolin after which it is named, is dedicated primarily to music—with Nelson Eddy and Ilona Massey as its co-stars. The blondly sirenic Miss Massey, it will be recalled, has been awaiting this opporunity ever since her brief introductory appearance in "Rosalie." It finally has caught up with her in one of the glossiest productions of the season.

About the pronunciation of that title, if you were in Washington a round quarter of a century ago, when Bassili Andreeff, great Russian balalaika virtuoso and composer, first brought his Balalaika Orchestra to the stage of the Columbia Theater, you will remember that he called it "bal-al-eye-ee-ka," with the accent on the penultimate syllable. Incidentally, his musicianly instrumentalists—some 40 of them—gave "The Song of the Volga Boatmen" an effect it had never had before and has never had since. At least to these ears.

There should be no confusion or lost motion in seating the patrons of the reserved performances of "Gone With the Wind," beginning tomorrow night at Loew's Palace Theater. For these evening performances—the morning and afternoon presentations are unreserved on weekdays—a specially engaged floor staff has been put under the direction of John Kintz, for many years chief of ushers at the National Theater. For a fortnight, Mr. Kintz, with the full permission and cooperation of Manager Edmund Plohn, of the National, has been instructing and drilling a corps of 35 ushers at the Palace in their duties and how to dispatch them smoothly and speedily. If there is a hitch, it will not be his fault.

It still is not to late to participate in the tryouts for parts in George Bernard Shaw's "Saint Joan," being held by the Washington Civic Theater in its rehearsal room, 918 Fourteenth street, between the hours of 4 and 6 and 7:30 and 10 p. m., today and tomorrow. Never before presented in Washington, "Saint Joan" will be produced by the Civic Theater, under the direction of Day Tuttle, with Winifred Lenihan in the title role. The tryouts began yesterday and will be continued through Friday.

That was a "flying" trip in more ways than one that Raymond Massey made from Chicago to Washington for the world premiere of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," now on the screen at RKO-Keith's Theater. Delayed en route, Mr. Massey abandoned his train and planed into Washington Sunday afternoon in time for dinner at the White House, attended the Monday dinner at the Carlton preceding the premiere, made a personal appearance on the stage at Keith's, broadcast from a local station at 11:05 that night and hurried thence aboard his train to be in Chicago for Tuesday night's performance of the Robert E. Sherwood Pulitzer Prize play, in which he created the title role at the National in this city something over a year ago. That, I submit, is moving about a bit.

More-Than-Meets-the-Eye Note

If you think "moving about a bit" is easy, go out and try it on our Washington streets since Tuesday night's more or less white blanket!

Officers and Men Scan the First Death Roll

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 24.

With all these charges heaped upon labor leader Willie Bioff, I wonder if he isn't a little sorry he didn't take my advice of December 22 and go back voluntarily to Chicago, throw himself on the mercy of the court, and take what was coming to him? Instead, he said, "I'm going to blow the lid off Hollywood." But the current Saturday Evepost, on the stands today, has blown the lid off Willie.

HOPPER

The story is called, "All Right, Gentlemen, do We Get the Money?" Willie got his—$100,000 from Joe Schenck, who explained: "I told them I felt the property he was buying was security for the loan, and I also told them it was an opportunity to get Mr. Bioff under obligation to me. He was awful tough in his negotiations and I thought he would be a little easier on us." And I understand Willie said the other day that if he beats this rap, that's OK—if not, he'll "sing." Which means "squeal." And will that throw a bombshell into these peaceful Hollywood hills? After all, what's he got to lose?

The other day I bumped into William Anthony McGuire in the Beverly Hills Derby. You know Bill wrote original screenplay "Lillian Russell," which just started production with Alice Faye, Don Ameche, Henry Fonda and one of the best casts ever put together. I tried to buzz Bill about his next picture but other than to say that it was going to be for Zanuck, he was like a clam. However, during lunch (which I stuck him for) we got to talking about old Broadway. You know, "yours truly" was for ten months in Bill's biggest success, "Six Cylinder Love." And our conversation kept drifting around to Bessie McCoy, the "Yama Yama Girl" and Richard Harding Davis, her husband. He was the famous war correspondent. I began to smell a mouse and I'll bet my Easter bonnet, which I haven't got yet, that will be his next for Zanuck. Incidentally, what a natural for great parts for Alice Faye and Tyrone Power.

The English are such surprising people! For the duration of the war, their masterpieces have been removed from th National Gallery and hidden so that they can't be destroyed by air raids. But the trustees missed them, so they've asked the English owners of fine paintings if they can borrow theirs for an exhibit which will be open to the public. Her Majesty the Queen is lending her portrait of George Bernard Shaw, by Augustus John. I don't know if that is her way of critizing Mr. Shaw, by subjecting his portrait to possible air raids, but now other owners have come forth and are willing to pay the cost of transporting the pictures into London, and they add, "We know it's asking a great deal at a time like this, but we believe it is doing a valuable service to the public." Jimmy Roosevelt, watching Devi Dja and her Javanese dancers the other night agreed with me—they're swell! "That big handsome fellow, Waluyo," Jimmy said, "is the soul of grace and the essence of simple charm." His smile is disarming. As the young prince who finds his princess slain he did a tragis solo in which even the tips if his fingers spoke. Hollywood, always on the lookout for something different, could do something with him.

That smash satire, "Meet the People," which has taken Hollywood by storm, will shortly be spread in three national magazines. Incidentally, the show chalks up another record—two gala openings in less than as many months. The February 1 opening at the Hollywood Playhouse is going to be three times as big as the previous one at the Assistance League. And, for the first time in years of theatrical history the brokers are not only laying their cash on the line to see the show—but can't get more than 12 tickets each . . . And wait till you see what another mag has done for glamour! "Isa Miranda Strikes Back at Glamour"—why, Isa, how could you poke such fun at our publicity poses? Director Rouben Mamoulian is about to turn autobiographer. Alfred Knopf will publish the vivid story of his theatrical career, which ought to make for good reading. You know Mamoulian did the first full length technicolor film, "Becky Sharp" which starred Miriam Hopkins; one of the first talkies, in 1928, "Applause" with Helen Morgan; on the stage he'd done "Farewell to Arms," "Porgy" and has even directed Gilbert and Sullivan operas and "Carmen" and "Faust." That's a varied career, and I'll be waiting for it.

Victor Young, who composed and conducted the musical score for "Gulliver's Travels," once played a three-hour concert for a bowl of soup in Warsaw, Poland. As a boy violinist, Victor was jailed in Warsaw when he escaped from Russia during the Bolshevik Revolution. Starving to death in prison he bribed officials for a bowl of soup by playing his fiddle for three hours.

Louella O. Parsons' Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Jan. 24 (INS).—When "Magic Bullet" is released—and I hope to heaven the Warners change the title back to "The Story of Doctor Ehrlich"—Edward G. Robinson will rank with Paul Muni and Spencer Tracy as one of the finest character actors on the screen. Eddie doesn't need a gun in his hand to prove to the world that he can act. I was on the set when they were making the Ehrlich epic and I didn't even know him—so wonderful is the makeup Perc Westmore furnished him. Moreover, he matches his appearance with a performance that will have the critics raving from coast to coast.

LOUELLA PARSONS

The story is a daring one, but handled so delicately that it should have the support of the American Medical Association and all the doctors. Don't think after playing "Ehrlich" that Eddie is going back to gangster parts. His next is "This Man Reuter," the story of the famous European news service founded by Reuter. Hal Wallis bought the story in Europe and Valentine Williams is scripting it.

Our 1940 glamour girls have bigger feet than the movie pets of 10 and 15 years ago. Linda Darnell had to have her tootsies measured to a place in the concrete sidewalk of Grauman's Chinese theater and she wears a size and a half larger than Mary Pickford, Norma Talmadge, and Gloria Swanson. Linda will not only get her footprint in cement in her movie "Twinkle, Twinkle, Little Star," but the imprint will remain there. Impresario Sid Grauman, who has escorted dozens of movie stars through the portals of the theater, has signed to play himself. He will be shown with Linda, John Payne, Mary Healy and the rest of the Twentieth Century-Fox galaxy. And Sid is a good photographic subject.

One of the front-page romances of some years ago was that of Lee Keith, concert pianist, and Borden Chase, sand hog, or to be more elegant, tunnel constructionist. He was working on the Hudson River tunnel when they met and married. She took him out of his digging job and persuaded him to write and he's been very successful. Now they're both in Hollywood with the former sand hog assigned to prepare "Black Gold," Zorina's next picture. Perhaps I shouldn't say Zorina's next picture since Gary Cooper is to be co-starred, and excellent actress though Zorina is, I'd never dream of putting her above Gary.

Chatter in Hollywood: Greta Garbo arrived safe and sound in New York in company with a woman friend. She went immediately to an apartment which she has leased and the plan now is for her to leave for Florida within a few days. Gaylord Hauser will also bask in the sunshine of Miami Beach. I hate to be a meanie and betray their plans for they are so-o-o in love, but, after all I am a newspaper woman and this romance is well worth watching. "Ninotchka" has greatly enhanced Greta Garbo's popularity throughout the country and in many cities she is the choice for the academy winner.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Ileanna, Stan Laurel's estranged bride, with Lew Brice at Maxie's—a very new combination; Phyllis Brooks and Freddie Brisson, a Victor Hugo twosome; that was Ann Morrison dining with Eddie Marin at the Troc; Edwina Mandel still sick with the flu; Errol Flynn returned from New York on schedule and gave the studio executives a shock when he asked for the "Sea Hawk" script the moment he stepped off the plane—without being asked to read it either; Claudette Colbert uses carmine-tipped cigarettes, and a very good idea, to take care of the overflow of lipstick; the first I ever saw were used by Ann Marsters, of the Chicago Herald-American; Fred Perry and Helen Vinson, once separated and rumored divorcing, are every day luncheon guests at the Delhaven.

Jimmie Stewart flew to Kansas City yesterday. Talk is that he went to bring back a new plane he bought; Joan Crawford convalescing after an attack of flu; Arthur Treacher growing a moustache on account of he says he wants to look like Rhett Butler; Mike Levee leaves Friday for New York to talk business to Paul Muni and Franchot Tone and to get in a few of the shows; Mickey Rooney delighted the Victor Hugo guests by taking over the drum and playing with the orchestra the entire evening; Patric Knowles, stunting in the air, had a very narrow escape from a crackup; Forrest Tucker, Helen Parrish's heart-throb, leaves for New York to make the acquaintance of his new twin nieces born to his sister; the pretty girl dining at Sardi's with Mack Gray is Jean O'Donnell, Vivien Leigh's stand-in.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow.

Girl Flips Penny, Film Career Wins

Because a bright, new 1939 penny came up heads instead of tails, Bunty Cutler is on her way to a screen career.

Miss Cutler will begin her first screen role, that of Julie in "New Moon," starring Jeanette MacDonald and Nelson Eddy. She arrived in Hollywood recently by plane from New York.

It was in New York that the latest screen find flipped her penny after receiving a wire from M-G-M that Producer Robert Z. Leonard had wandered into the wrong projection room at the studio, seen her test and was so impressed that he ordered casting to find her at once.

The test was made several months ago when the studio was searching for girls to portray roles in "The Women." At that time Bunty was engaged in her first professional stage role, that of Sylvia in the Las Palmas production of the Clare Boothe play.

Bunty heard from the test on one occasion after that, when there was a possibility that she would play in "Balalaika." But something happened. As a result she packed her bags and went to New York to accept a play offer.

Then came the wire. Because she had been disappointed before, the youthful actress, a former student at Westlake School for Girls where she was active in dramatics, decided to leave the decision up to a brand-new 1939 penny. The penny said Hollywood.

Reviewing The Greatest Film Sensation In A Decade!

"... Nelson Bell, of The Post, said it when he stated, 'it is as imperishable as the stars and stripes,' ... you should have packed houses all the time just as it is tonight."
A. JASPER MOORE,

"I attended the show last evening and enjoyed the picture tremendously, especially the outstanding performance of Mr. Massey and his fine display of character acting and oration. The debate with Stephen Douglas was most enlightening and educational."

"... I can easily see how the play won Pulitizer Prize ... it is truly a marvelous show."
MRS. EULALIA M. ALVEY,

Horton Play And 'Gone' Top The New Week

Comedian at National; Film Version of Novel Tomorrow at Palace

"SPRINGTIME FOR HENRY." Edward Everett Horton brings his phenomenally successful revival of Benn W. Levy's comedy to the National Theater Monday night for a week's engagement. The amusing farceur of the films is making an extended transcontinental tour in this appropriate vehicle, which concerns a wealthy man-about-town who is slightly eccentric, but never idle. Continkually involved in escapades, he is reformed by his beautiful secretary only to lapse back into his former merry ways and drag her along with him. In the supporting cast Laurence Rivers presents Gordon Richards, one of the former National Theater Players; Marjorie Lord, Barbara Brown and Sally McMorrow. Matinees Wednesday and Thursday.

Palace

"GONE WITH THE WIND." David O. Selznick's film version of the Margaret Mitchell novel opens a special engagement tomorrow morning at the Palace Theater. Doors will open at 9 a. m. and the first screening will begin at 9:45. The morning and afternoon showings will be continuous and on an unreserved seat policy. The final afternoon showing will begin at 2:45 o'clock. Seats for the evening performance, which begins at 8 o'clock, are reserved and are on sale at the box-office two weeks in advance. This policy will be followed each weekday, while on Sundays, seats for the two showings, at 2 and 8 p. m., are reserved. It seems unnecessary to mention that Vivien Leigh plays Scarlet O'Hara, Clark Gable, Rhett Butler, and that the supporting cast includes Olivia de Havilland, Leslie Howard, Thomas Mitchell, Ona Munson and Laura Hope Crews. Filmed entirely in Technicolor.

Earle

"THE FIGHTING SIXTY-NINTH." James Cagney, Pat O'Brien and George Brent costar in this story of New York's Sixty-ninth Regiment during the World War. The Rainbow Division, of which it was a part, "Wild Bill" Donovan, Joyce Kilmer and Father Duffy figure in the story, with O'Brien as Father Duffy and Brent as Donovan. Cagney is a one-man army. The cast includes Jeffrey Lynn, Alan Hale, Frank McHugh, Dennis Morgan, John Litel and Dick Foran. "Red" Skelton is heldover as the stage's headline attraction. The energetic comedian will present an entirely new act and will continue to be assisted by Edna Stillwell. Others on the stage will include Chick and Lee, Toy and Wing, Dorothy Bruce and the Roxyettes. Opens tomorrow morning.

Capitol

"BALALAIKA." Nelson Eddy costars with Ilona Massey, a new prima donna, in this musical drama of the old Russia, as it was before, during and after the Revolution. The popular barytone plays a Colonel of the Cossacks who falls in love with the daughter of a revolutionist. A highly successful London stage production, the screen version contains several songs of the original as well as a new group composed for the screen version by Herbert Stothart. Charlie Ruggles, Frank Morgan, Lionel Atwill, C Aubrey Smith and Dalies Frantz are featured. "Encore," on the stage, brings back performers who have recently scored at the Capitol. Larry Adler, the harmonica maestro, headlines. Stuart and Martin, Gil and Bernie Mason, Alexander and Santos, Sam Jack Kaufman and the Rhythm Rockets complete the bill. Opens tomorrow morning.

RKO-Keith's

"ABE LINCOLN IN ILLINOIS." After a brilliant world premiere and paeans of praise from the press, the screen version of Robert E. Sherwood's Pulitzer Prize play has settled down for a special engagement at the Fifteenth street house. Raymond Massey plays his original stage role of the martyred President and Ruth Gordon, Gene Lockhart, Mary Howard and Harvey Stephens have other leading parts. Seats for the continuous morning and afternoon showings are unreserved. Those for the single evening showing at 8:45 p. m. are reserved and are now on sale at the box office.

Metropolitan

"BROTHER RAT AND A BABY." This sequel to last season's youthful comedy hit continues at the Metropolitan after a week at the Earle. Priscilla Lane, Wayne Morris, Jane Bryan, Eddie Albert, Jane Wyman and Ronald Reagan are in the cast.

Columbia

"JUDGE HARDY AND SON." Mickey Rooney and Lewis Stone return in the title roles of this comedy-drama, which recently played at the Capitol. The cast also includes Fay Holden, Cecilia Parker, Sara Haden, June Preisser, Margaret Early, Maria Ouspenskaya and Henry Hull. Opens tomorrow morning.

Trans-Lux

"CRISIS IN THE PACIFIC." This "March of Time' release depicts the dilemma the United States faces in the Far East, detailing the important part the Navy is playing in the South Pacific. "Jai Allai,' a sports short, describes the unusual game and "Society Dog Show" is the Walt Disney color cartoon. These short subjects supplement 35 minutes of the latest newsreels. Opens tomorrow morning.

Gayety

"RED HOT AND BEAUTIFUL." Rose La Rose will be the star of next week's burlesque production at the Gayety Theater. The revue opens Sunday afternoon and the charmer will be supported by a large company including "Slats" Taylor, "Tiny" Fuller, Ermain Parker, Irving Karo, Eva Oakley, Dudley Douglas and Kay Johnson. A chorus of 16 dancers also is featured in the presentation.

Atlas

PAT ROONEY returns to the northeast "combination" house where he recently played a record-breaking week. The veteran tap dancer presents a new routine and a revue of his own. Straub and Lee, musical comedians, head the group of supporting variety performers. The double-feature screen attraction stars Richard Arlen in "Tropic Fury" and Baby Sandy in "Little Accident." The bill opens Sunday afternoon to continue through Tuesday.

Joins List of Visiting Stars

JAMES CAGNEY,
the Private Jerry Plunkett in "The Fighting 69th," opening tomorrow on the screen at the Earle Theater, who, with Pat O'Brien, the Father Duffy of the cast, will come from the Warner Brothers studios in Hollywood to participate, in person, in the President's birthday celebrations on January 30

Arnold Manuscript Montgomery Gift

Edward Arnold's original manuscript of his autobiography, soon to be published by Liveright, has been presented to Robert Montgomery. The Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer star has an outstanding private collection of manuscripts, including James Hilton's "Good-bye, Mr. Chips."

While appearing together in "The Earl of Chicago," Montgomery is helping Arnold in reading galley proofs of his life story.

Entire Populace Pays Rooney Honor

Mickey Rooney, the irrepressible Andy of "Hardy Family" series, was the recipient of one of the most unusual "testimonials" ever presented in the film colony—an album with the signatures of all the inhabitants of Taihape, New Zealand.

Bound with hand-tooled leather and resplendent with more than 2,000 names affixed, including those of the Mayor and other civic and business officials, lauds Mickey's portrayal of Andy Hardy.

Tribute of an entire city, the text of the "testimonial" ends with "Okay, Mickey!"

Down to Earth

The affection of an abused orphan boy for a thoroughbred colt and the efforts of his greedy uncle to get rid of the animal are combined to form the plot of "Two Thoroughbreds."

The Little Dips Far Back for A Chaplin Hit

'Carmen,' Burlesqued, Is Companion for March's 'Dr. Jekyll'

By Richard L. Coe

We've been to a mah-vahlas picture. It's 22 years old, stars Charlie Chaplin and Ben Turpin and is a burlesque "Carmen." The Little Theater revived it yesterday to share the screen with another film from the archives, Fredric March's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde."

If the Little's hunch is as right as it seems from this point, we may be in for a cycle of those epics and farces which were the sensations of a generation ago. Yesterday's packed house roared with glee at the Chaplin antics, which have not changed much and at those pithy subtitles, which certainly have.

To make matters a bit more nostalgic, Pearl Hauer is at the piano to accompany this silent antique with rippling arpeggios and sobbing melodies from Bizet's opera. Since she does not try to steal the show from the celluloid, the music makes an elegant background for a very saucy take-off.

In 1918 30 minutes was pretty long running time for a "flicker." Now a half hour might serve for the trailer of a four-hour film. Consequently, the story races along at a stupendous clip and the outlines of this mad burlesque are exceedingly shadowy as to plot, but glittering as to the Chaplin humor. Charlie is the dashing Don Jose and, under the influence of those titles, we might add that he dashes all over the place. He continually trips over a rock that remains stubbornly in his way and orders it shot. With Edna Purviance in the title role he chases a love that never will be his.

Some Brief Subtitles

Those subtitles are a choice rarity. Somehow, on the screen these hammy cracks seem hilariously funny: "In the cafe, where if the waitresses don't kill you, the food will." Or, as Chaplin is about to plunge his knife into the cigarette girl, "The time has come, Carmen, for you to marry me or to learn to play a harp."

If our sense of humor is not too depraved, you ought to get a kick out of this "Carmen."

Fredric March's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" was the Academy Award winner of 1932. Both the Robert Louis Stevenson story and the March performance, which endless impersonators have kept alive, are familiar and welcome visitors. The supporting cast includes Miriam Hopkins, Rose Hobart, Holmes Herbert and Halliwell Hobbes. Rouben Mamoulian directed the film in which the star of nine years ago appears exactly nine years younger than he does today, perfectly natural for any human but a bit surprising for a screen star. However, the Stevenson story still shows no sign of age.

The pairing of these two warhorses results in a peculiarly amusing and interesting bill.

THE UNTED STATES ATTORNEY'S office, which bagged Lepke, is on the hunt for bigger game and will announce sweeping racketeer indictments shortly . . . Henry Ford refused to switch his symphony broadcast on Sunday—when he was asked to avoid a conflict with Herbert Hoover's broadcast for Finnish relief . . . Sidney Kingsley, who sold the movie rights to "The World We Make" for $100,000, presented the show to his cast Monday night . . . Greta Garbo, who sat in the second row at "DuBarry Was a Lady" Monday night, wasn't photographed, because all the available news-camera men were around the corner, at Madison Square Garden, photographing the Browder rally.

ERSKINE CALDWELL, author "Tobacco Road," has completed his new novel, which will be called "Trouble in July" . . . Caldwell has just returned from a Western trip. In El Paso this author of one of the most he-mannish of American stories was stricken with chicken-pox. The amused physician who admitted him to the hospital draped an "Infants' Ward" sign on Caldwell's door and laughed at him every day for having such a childish disease . . . A week after Caldwell's discharge the physician came down with chicken-pox . . . Caldwell sent him a teething ring.

"And to show you it isn't true I'm going to read something to you—about George Jean Nathan" . . . Lewis proceeded to read passages about Nathan from the manuscript of a new book . . . "Who wrote it?" asked Nathan . . . Lewis shrugged and confessed: "I did."

ROSS BAGDASARIAN, cousin of William Saroyan, has a small role in Saroyan's "Time of Your Life." Ever since he first came from California Ross has dreamed of buying a city-made suit. Last week he counted his savings, went to a Broadway shop and had his fling . . . He emerged wearing his first New York suit—but it no longer fits him. "I didn't wear it in the rain," he explains. "It shrank because every time I wore it I got nervous—and perspired."

BECAUSE THE BRITISH removed from a Japanese boat the German sailors who were going home via the Pacific, the 38 German sailors who had been employed by Standard Oil and who still are here won't return to their country. They'll be sent elsewhere . . . Barney Ross, who won New York's admiration, will be tendered a farewell dinner at the New Yorker on January 30. He'll retire to Chicago the next day to open a restaurant . . . Fred Kaplan, the lawyer and bridge champion, was with Renee de Marco last night, and Renee denied the reports of their romance. "Look, I've ordered champagne," she said. "If we were really in love I'd order sodapop."

SUNDAY NIGHT almost 30 people entered the State Dining Room at the White House and dined there before the preview of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" . . . The guests included the Broadway and Hollywood notables who had been associated with the stage and movie versions of the Lincoln play . . . "But why the State Dining Room?" some one asked the President. "This isn't a State function." "This," explained Perfect Host Roosevelt, "is the room which has the Lincoln portrait."

Raising Flowers

Robert Young is going in for floriculture with real enthusiasm on his Tarzana ranch. He has built a lath house for gardenias and orchids and is making some experiments in raising new varieties.

Swimmin' Hole For Gable Ranch

James Whitcomb Riley's "The Ol' Swimmin' Hole" will be revived in reality on the Clark Gable-Carole Lombard ranch in the near future.

Adjoining an ancient oak tree, with its twisted branches, the pool is to be constructed as near in appearance to the old swimming hole as modern engineering can make it.

The huge oak will serve as a springboard and the pool will curve and twist about other trees on that part of the ranch.

"A modern California swimming pool would be as out of place on the ranch as a mutt in a dog show," Gable explains.

Desiring to supervise the construction of the swimming hole, Gable says he will not start its construction until he finishes work in "Strange Cargo," opposite Joan Crawford.

Britt Wood, portraying the featured comedy role in "Santa Fe Marshal," owns three homes, one in Lansing, Mich., one in Memphis, Tenn., and one in Canoga Park, Calif., which he now constantly occupies.

In The Other Alley

Having picked Vice President Garner off the right-hand corner with his first well-aimed ball, and sent Security Administrator McNutt spinning with the second, John L. Lewis has hurled the third squarely down the middle of the alley. A lot of pins are wobbling from the reverberations of the smack which yesterday hit the one labeled "third term."

That is not true, however, of the pin which bears the name of Burton K. Wheeler. Fanned by the hot blast of Mr. Lewis' third ball the Montana Senator yesterday hastened to say that his sentiments were pretty much those of the bowler. But he did add a footnote to the effect that political tenpins have certain interests in common.

Of course a political tenpin can be knocked down time and again and still be a most serviceable piece of property. That wicked, poker-playing, whisky-drinking old pin got firmly back on its flat base long since, and the one labeled 2 per cent is not likely to lie in the gutter long. The same and more of it can be said of that whose name and position lead all the rest.

And if one is a strong-arm bowler, already proficient in making strikes, the transient effect on the pins is of far less importance than the score to be written up for public admiration.

So the exhibition of adroitness in Columbus yesterday will not cause a lasting sensation. Primarily it arouses a mild curiosity as to how the C. I. O. champion will bowl when he moves over into the G. O. P. alley.

A Winter's Tale

It is logical to suspect that the Junior Chamber of Commerce of Atlanta, Ga., must have had something to do with enticing the 9½-inch snowfall to that city. Anyhow, for the second time in little more than a month, the name of Atlanta outbid a good many war cables for respectful attention on the front pages of the newspapers of the land.

To add to the eclat, we have the assurance of the Weather Bureau that this recent snowstorm was no Northern blizzard that had wandered out of its way. It was, it seems, the result of "a semi-tropical disturbance that had formed around the Gulf of Mexico." In other words, this snow was as much a home-grown Dixie product as Scarlett O'Hara herself.

After its far-Southern premiere, the snowstorm moved north for an impressive one-night stand in Washington, and will doubtless eventually reach Broadway. Hereabouts, it was accompanied by solemn, cathedral-like hush, due partly, of course, to the stoppage of traffic but also to the sudden and embarrassed silence on the part of those who have been complaining that a generation reared in these degenerate times and in these effeminate latitudes has no conception of a good old-fashioned Northern winter.

The silence, of course, is only temporary. When they have finished digging out the driveway, divested themselves of five or six outer layers of clothing and settled down beside a snorter of something warm, the old-timers will begin to point out certain differences between these new-fangled made-in-Dixie snowstorms and the genuine old article described by Whittier and others.

These differences, they will no doubt admit, are subjective rather than objective. Nine and a half inches of snow would be plenty in any man's winter. They will point out, however, that the psychological effect of being awakened by the clamor of motor trucks thrown into first gear is not the same as being awakened by the music of the milkman's sleighbells; that inspecting the thermostat of the oil burner is not the same as tunneling through to the woodshed; and that the adventure of driving to town without chains on a day like yesterday is child's play compared to the hazards of riding a few blocks in an old horse car with the driver and passengers dancing and flapping arms like the chorus of a Russian ballet.

Why, in the old days even if a fellow managed to get home eventually, he didn't dare to kiss his wife and children for fear of stabbing them to death with the icicles on his moustache!

A Treaty Expires

With the expiration tomorrow of the commercial treaty of 1911, a new and significant chapter in Japanese-American relations will be ushered in.

The Government of the United States cannot be accused of having acted precipitately in denouncing, six months ago, the treaty which has governed the commercial dealings between the two countries for a generation. For more than eight years, and particularly since the outbreak of the present undeclared Sino-Japanese war in the summer of 1937, the Japanese have repeatedly manifested a complete disregard of American rights and interests in China. The Department of State has protested against a long and humiliating series of unfriendly actions. But mere protests have been wholly ineffective.

In the meantime, the methods employed by Japan in conducting her invasion of China have given rise to a widespread popular demand that this country should cease furnishing Japan with basic war materials. With the expiration of the Japanese-American commercial treaty, and the lapsing of the most-favored-nation rights which Japan has previously enjoyed here, the way is paved for such action.

No one knows better than the Japanese how seriously that country could be injured by legislative interference with normal trade relations. In the first nine months of 1939 Japan provided only 6.4 per cent of this country's imports and took only 7.1 per cent of our exports. On the other hand the American share of Japan's imports during the same period was 33.5 per cent, while we took 16.1 per cent of her exports. Actually Japan's commercial dependence on the United States is even greater than this figure would indicate. In certain materials, notably high octane gas and scrap iron, the American source of supply is well-nigh indispensable to Japan's power to make war.

It is not surprising, then, that the Japanese view with fear and foreboding the impending lapse of Japan's most-favored-nation status in this country. For tomorrow, in addition to the embargo threat, the way will be open to the imposition by executive action of duties on Japanese imports into the United States. And while such extra levies, if imposed, would not completely close the American market to Japanese products they would materially add to that country's grave economic difficulties.

It is for this reason that the Japanese have been hoping for the negotiation of a new commercial treaty, or at least of a modus-vivendi that would prevent discriminatory action by the United States. These hopes have died. In an interview with the Japanese Ambassador this week, Assistant Secretary of State Berle made it clear that no stop-gap arrangement is contemplated by the Administration.

Whether retaliatory measures will be taken against Japanese trade will now depend largely on Japan's conduct in the Far East. A sword of Damocles is obviously poised over Tokyo. Two and a half years of relatively unsuccessful war have sapped Japan's strength and depleted her reserves. But as long as the hope of imminent victory burned brightly, and as long as the United States showed readiness to accept discriminatory measures carried out by Japan against our nationals, the Japanese military leaders saw no need of paying attention to the repeated protests from Washington.

They can only continue to do so at the peril of the nation which they claim to love, but which they have steadily pushed toward the brink of disaster.

The Ryan Indictment

The head of the International Longshoremen's Association, an A. F. of L. union, together with several other labor officials and their respective unions, have been indicted by a United States grand jury on charges of conspiring to violate the Sherman antitrust law. This is the latest in a series of indictments resulting from efforts of the Department of Justice to break up monopolistic practices and conspiratorial activities of both labor unions and employer organizations.

The activities complained of in the present case grew out of an A. F. of L.-C. I. O. jurisdictional dispute. The defendant unions are said to have refused to handle lumber for dealers whose employes are affiliated with a C. I. O. union, with the result that over $2,000,000 of lumber is now tied up in yards and docks in New York City. Assuming the facts to be as stated, the question at issue is whether the unions indulging in such pressure tactics are subject to prosecution under the antitrust laws.

The A. F. of L. takes the position that the Clayton act "specifically and completely exempted labor organizations and members and officers thereof from prosecution under the Sherman antitrust law on any grounds or pretext." The Clayton act, however, contains a reservation which the A. F. L. conveniently ignores. It states that nothing in the antitrust laws shall be construed to forbid or restrain individual members of unions "from lawfully carrying out the legitimate objects thereof."

In the present instance, the question appears to be squarely raised whether it is "legitimate" to boycott and blacklist employers who refuse to assist one labor group to destroy a rival faction. In the opinion of Assistant Attorney General Thurman Arnold, head of the antitrust division of the Department of Justice, the trade union movement will be furthered, and the rank and file of union members greatly benefited, by invoking the law against labor leaders who seek to use unions for purposes not related to questions of hours, wages, health and other matters of direct concern to members.

Jurisdictional disputes are especially likely to arouse public antagonism to unions, since they bring pressure to bear upon employers with whom labor has no quarrel, and frequently cause the general public great inconvenience. The Department of Justice believes, evidently, that it is working for, not against labor, in "cracking down" on those labor leaders who exploit their own members in an effort to extend the scope of their authority.

Appeal For Economy

In his Boston address Thomas E. Dewey skillfully sought to convert the staggering figures of New Deal spending into terms that the average man can understand.

By such expedients as contrasting the volume of Federal expenditures with the amounts earned by the industrial workers of New England he brought home both to his immediate and his wider radio audience the immensity of current Government outlays. That prepared the way for his demonstration of the impossibility of relying upon taxation of the rich to finance Government costs. Thus, by easy stages, he arrived at the inescapable conclusion that "the cost of a spendthrift government is paid by every man, woman and child in the country."

"The New Deal is digging into your pocket every time you turn around," he said, pointing to the excise taxes that the consumer is paying daily on cigarettes, sugar, gasoline, tires, cosmetics, movies and other articles of general use. Yet, despite these all-pervasive taxes, the Government is still borrowing 45 cents of every dollar spent.

By such means Mr. Dewey makes an impressive appeal for economy. His arguments are designed to arouse the man on the street to a realization of his vital personal stake in a reduction of Government outlays. Too often speakers are content to invoke a spectre of ultimate financial ruin, relying upon the public to conclude therefrom that immediate economy is essential. Mr. Dewey is a shrewd campaigner who knows that men and women respond most readily to arguments that fall within their personal experience and require little exercise of either imagination or reasoning power.

If Mr. Dewey had confined his remarks to a blanket appeal for economy, however, he would have laid himself open to the charge of ignoring the just claims of the needy. Therefore, he was careful to point out that his plea for a reduction in expenditures does not entail economy at the expense of the unemployed or the aged. To support that assertion he points to the heavy increase in non-relief outlays since the first year of the Roosevelt Administration. Here is evidence that cuts can be made without trimming the relief budget of any but clearly wasteful outlays.

Thus Mr. Dewey is able to combine advocacy of retrenchment with assurances that necessary relief outlays need not be curtailed. In reply to those who fear that reductions in Government spending will lead to business recession he points to the millions now unemployed, and the restricted flow of private investment capital, as proof of the failure of the spending policy to produce a reliable prosperity.

In the opening speech of his campaign, in Milwaukee, Mr. Dewey affirmed his confidence in the future of the United States and accused the Administration of adopting a defeatist attitude. That defeatism is nowhere more apparent than in the assumption that the Government must spend and spend to bolster the lagging initiative of private business and to provide outlets for capital that no longer can be profitably employed in private enterprise. This week, in Boston, Mr. Dewey not only denied the necessity of such a policy, but called imperatively for a change which will "release the energy of private enterprise to transform unemployment into employment, relief into jobs."

Bourgeois Cosmology

From Time Magazine.

Up to now, astronomers in bourgeois democracies have not suspected that there might be a political cast to the curvature of space and the size of the universe. Last week, however, the U. S. journal Science reprinted parts of a fiery resolution recently adopted by the Kremlin's official astronomers, subsequently published in the Astronomical Journal of the Soviet Union:

"Modern bourgeois cosmogony is in a state of deep ideological confusion resulting from its refusal to accept the only true dialectic-materialistic concept, namely, the infinity of the universe with respect to space as well as time.

"The hostile work of the agents of Fascism, who, at one time, managed to penetrate to leading positions in certain astronomical and other institutions as well as in the press, has led to revolting propaganda of counterrevolutionary bourgeois ideology in the literature (of cosmology).

'The Palestine Question'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: In a letter which appeared in The Washington Post of January 11, J. O. Knott takes to task the American Jewish leaders for pressing the Palestine question on the public. The burden of the complaint is that England is "leading the fight against the arch enemy of the Jews—Hitler."

The Jewish people are not unmindful of Great Britain's part in the Palestine enterprise. They are profoundly appreciative. Great Britain was the first country in the world in 1900 years publicly to acknowledge the historical claim of the Jewish people to Palestine as the Jewish national homeland. The Balfour Declaration will forever remain as one of the imperishable documents in Jewish history.

Furthermore, in Palestine, over 100,000 able-bodied men and women have registered and pledged themselves to serve Great Britain in this hour of crisis. All Jewish resources in Palestine, private and public, are at the command of Great Britain. The manhood and the wealth of Palestine are subject to England's order in the successful prosecution of the war. The Jewish people know only too well the stark tragedy which awaits them if perchance the forces of the Reich should prevail over Great Britain and France.

Mr. J. O. Knott misconceives the reason American Jewish leaders may be pressing the Palestine question at this time. While Great Britain may be pledged to the restoration of Poland, the undeniable fact remains that there are over 3,000,000 refugees from that ill-fated, unhappy country. We should add to these millions the hundreds of thousands of other refugees from Germany, Austria and Czecho-Slovakia. The gates of most countries of the world are tightly shut to these refugees, and those countries whose gates are open permit only a limited number to pass through them.

It therefore becomes of vital importance that the gates of Palestine should remain open for those who, through no fault of their own, are wanderers upon the highways of the world, shuffled from one country to another, and unwanted in most. This is the real reason that American Jewish leaders at the present moment are so concerned with impressing upon Great Britain the importance of keeping open the doors of Palestine, merely as a place of refuge and a haven of hope for those who are not wanted elsewhere. This is the least the Jews can do. This is the least that all right-thinking humanity can do.

The Forgotten Man?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: What has happened to all the tender solicitude of President Roosevelt for the one-third of Americans who are ill-clothed, ill-fed and ill-housed? All worthwhile services of the Government toward unfortunate citizens of this country are being curtailed.

The National Youth Administration, the CCC, the health program are all being blue-penciled while Mr. Roosevelt urges that 60 millions of good United States dollars be sent to aid Finland.

According to the news reports, the Finns are just about mopping up the Soviets, so why should they need any help? If the President is so anxious to dispense sweetness and light let him not forget the people who elected him to the office he now holds.

Take Bermuda?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a constant reader of your paper, permit me to submit my views of British tactics. I hope that Secretary Hull's presentment of protests to the British government will at least awaken American public opinion to the fact that the so-called British upper class or officialdom has very little respect or friendship for the United States.

The British people are good people but the present government is as far apart from the masses of Britain as it is possible for two sections of society to be. The flouting of our prestige by a government which is already so heavily indebted to us is but a continuation of the stupidity of British officialdom since the days of the last war.

Perhaps if Secretary Hull suggests that we take Bermuda, the slight incident of British interference with our mails will cease. It seems to me that among the first leading lights of world officialdom who must go are Chamberlain, Churchill and their cohorts.

Study Of Wildlife

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Our would-be public men ought to take a few lessons in wildlife. Ostriches, for instance, the Great Teddy's fifth cousin notwithstanding, don't bury their heads in the sand. They lay their necks along the ground and don't stick them out, a wise precaution for businessmen under the present regime.

And young Tom Dewey better learn about porcupines before he gets out West. Porcupines are the only animals under full-year-round protection in the Western mountains, because they are so slow, so stupid, so utterly easy to kill with a blow of a stick, that they are kept for emergency eating by men who are lost.

To tell Americans to be porcupines is picturesque, but it is to mark them for later slaughter. It rather goes to show that Tom is too young for his ambition, and that we had better draft a man who knows his world, the whole round of it—and can handle it—one Herbert Hoover, to be exact.

'Roulette With Destiny'

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I have read with great interest the article written by Miss Dorothy Thompson and published in The Post of January 19 entitled "Roulette with Destiny." No one can deny the truth of the statements contained therein.

I would recommend that this article be printed on cardboard about the size of a full sheet of your paper and a messenger be dispatched to deliver one copy, in such form, to the President of the United States, to the Vice President of the United States and to every member of the United States Senate and House of Representatives personally.

It is my belief if this was put before them in this manner they might take time off from their little political bickerings to read the article. If they are American citizens, in other than name only, the truths expressed therein might find some route in their politically dwarfed brains and awaken their sleeping consciences to bring lasting results to the world.

Tribute To Borah

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: We have just read through your columns of the death of Senator William E. Borah. Allow me to join your readers in expressing sincere regrets for the untimely end of this respected and beloved statesman. Indeed, he was not only a great American but a model citizen of the world.

We Filipinos deeply feel his loss. As champion of worthy causes, Senator Borah helped in our struggle for freedom. On January 17, 1933, when the bill to provide for the independence of the Philippines was enacted, Senator Borah in his characteristic way and inimitable style rose on the floor of the United States Senate and with eloquence and conviction uttered these meaningful words:

"I know, Mr. President, that whenever independence is granted there will be a risk. I am aware that the Filipino people may stumble and fall. But knowing full well that whenever independence is given these same things may—I should almost say must—happen, I am not willing longer to deny them a chance to work out their own salvation. Brave, gallant, and patriotic, they are entitled to win. I believe they will win. I shall evidence my faith in them by my vote."

This faith which Senator Borah had in the Filipinos is a constant challenge to our people. How we wished he could have lived longer to find justification for his belief. Living or dead, Senator Borah has justly earned for himself the admiration and gratitude of the Filipino people.

Instinctive Judgment

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: There has been much publicity about, and some demand for, a third term for President Roosevelt. Aside from the merits of Mr. Roosevelt, a third term would break a vital link in the chain which comprises our democracy.

One outstanding reason for the popularity of a third term, is that Mr. Roosevelt is the predominant figure in the public eye, and it is natural that we take the path of least resistance by letting conditions remain as they are instead of assuming the necessary initiative to locate and elect some other capable man to the office of President. However, if we rise and complete the task that confronts us, we shall promote not only our welfare but the life and happiness of those to follow.

"Seek and ye shall find" is an excellent example of a spiritual law that can be of great assistance in conducting our present quest. If we demand, look for, find and support the required "diamond in the rough" we shall have him.

If, on the other hand, we take the path of least resistance and limit our initiative to making marks on election day we shall have only ourselves to blame for the result and its consequences. Let us all, therefore, do our best to select and actively support the man whom we think best fitted to be our leader.

We, as ordinary people, can select this leader with far greater wisdom than those with many degrees and much political and administrative experience, because we are endowed by our Creator with an innate sense of guidance. This instinct has been largely eliminated in so-called intellectuals, because they tend to depend on themselves by making use of what they call "rational thinking."

This thinking is entirely of man, while instinctive judgment is of God. It is for this reason that a democratic form of government is far superior to a totalitarian system.

Fire, Fire!

Now don't think for a minute that I don't jump as high as the next fellow when somebody gives me a "hot foot," but I'm left quite cold by an ordinary fire.

There's a reason.

For the first ten years of my life, or as early as I remember, I was a sort of "kid auxiliary" to the fire department. The charge of the white horses, the smoking engine, the shiny pole in the firehouse, the men hanging on to the ladders putting on their coats the while, the thundering of the pumping, the orders of the captain, the crash of the windows under the axes, the crackle of the flames—these and the many other things that go with a fire thrilled me.

Then there was the fire alarm box up at the corner. I used to watch the inspectors open it and check the mechanism. At an early age, I had a yen to turn in an alarm. "Some day," I used to say to myself, "I will see a fire, rush to the box and flash the signal."

Washington had some blazes de luxe during this period of my childhood. The ball park stands burned to the ground. The big lumber yard turned to charcoal. The feed store was leveled. These, intermingled with the usual hot flues, etc., kept the firemen busy and provided much entertainment for me. However, my childhood ambition to turn in an alarm had not been achieved.

It was autumn and dusk. The sun had gone down and left my football team several yards from the brick pile that served as the goal line. I had just squeezed my nose guard into my back pocket between a half-eaten apple and my beanshooter.

"Fire!" shouted some one.

I tried to look in all directions at once. There was a fire! Flames were shooting skyward up the street. This was my chance!

Now bear in mind that I was not noted for my speed afoot in my youth. I was first choice when we played "tug-o'-war" but generally was the left over player when we chose sides for "run-sheep-run." There were at least ten boys with me in that autumn dusk who would have laughed if I suggested a foot race with them.

For years I have wondered where I developed the momentum that carried me from my position a block away to the fire alarm box. It seemed to me that the whole neighborhood was trying to get there first. Sometimes I think some of the timid just allowed me to outrun them. Then again, it might have been a case of hope long deferred sensing a chance at reality. At any rate, I came face to face with that fire alarm box with the situation my own. Furthermore I had arrived with my pocket knife in my hand.

I smashed the handle through the glass protecting the key I long had dreamed of turning. I opened the door. I did not have to read the instructions, "Pull down this lever." I knew them by heart. I almost broke the lever off, so hard did I jerk it into place.

I was a composite of all the heroes of history. My chest swelled. I held my head high. I had a mental picture of accepting a medal and some dignitary saying, "——for performing your civic duty."

But my empire crashed quicker than it had been built.

There was a shout from a boy who came up. "Don't do it, Walter! Don't do it! Don't turn in that alarm, there ain't no big fire. That was leaves burning and they're out already."

Thus I was transformed from a hero to a bum with the suddenness that a gallant boxer is turned into a writhing hulk by a single knock-out blow.

I was bewildered. Instead of feeling a medal on my chest I could fancy the crack of the stick on the back of my pants.

I used my only defense. I ran. With the same instinct that a runaway horse invariably stops at the stable, I ran home. Once in the hall, I threw my cap at the hatrack, tried to calm myself as best I could and walked into the dining room. The family had just sat down to dinner. I slipped into my chair, grabbed my plate and thrust it out for a helping of rabbit pie.

There was conversation, but I did not hear it. My ears were straining for the "dang-alang" of the fire engine that I knew was coming.

I had my first forkful of rabbit half way to my mouth; from a distance I heard what I had feared. I jumped to my feet and bellowed with all my might, "Here they come, Mom! Here they come!"

My Mom looked at me as if I were crazy. "Here comes what, Walter?" she asked in a perplexed tone.

"Here come the fire engines!" I shouted, clapping my hands to my ears as if I could keep them from arriving through this method.

The clang of the fire bell came louder.

"What's so strange about the fire engines coming?" asked Mom.

"Nothing, only I turned in the alarm. After I did, they told me there wasn't any fire," I cried.

I could now hear the grinding of the wheels, the thundering of the white horses and the shouts of the firemen as they went by our house.

"You just sit where you are, Walter," said my Mom, softly. Perhaps she thought I would not be identified as the turner-inner of that alarm.

A policeman, a fireman, my Pop and myself had a conference in the back of our store that night. I was lectured and relectured on turning in false alarms. I was told that it costs the District $40 each time the engines go out. I tried and tried to get a word in edgewise that there was a fire, but each time I opened my mouth I received one of those "don't talk back" looks.

If scaring me away from that fire alarm box was their objective, they hit a home run.

Nero, they say, fiddled while Rome burned. Well, I didn't have a fiddle, but I did have a pocket knife. From that point on, gladly would I have sat on a curb and whittled while Washington burned.

Fair Enough

Needed AFL Reforms

CONSTRUCTIVE suggestions are not my specialty, but if Will Green of the American Federation of Labor is short of ideas he might try these on for size:

First off, I would rewrite the constitution of the American Federation of Labor so as to permit the national body to govern its component units. It may be argued that this would centralize power, but, after all, in any organization or state there must be responsibility and authority at the top, and if you have able and conscientious men in the top positions there is no need to be alarmed.

To obtain the best possible ability and character for the higher positions I would limit the salaries and expense allowances provided for these jobs, forbid all such officers to engage in other occupations or business activities and compel them to file statements of their assets when they took office.

Close Check Urged On Leaders' Income

I WOULD require them to file duplicates of their income tax returns with the A. F. of L. treasury, with the plain understanding that any officer who reported outside income would have to explain where he got it. Anyone who received commissions on sales of material or insurance or bonds written for employers would be subject to impeachment, but I would provide very good salaries—say about $40,000 for the national president and as much as $25,000 a year for the president of international unions, in recognition of the fact that ability and integrity are worth something.

Martyrs are all right in holy wars, but the A. F. of L. needn't be at war with business. It is now big enough to do business with business for the mutual advantage of labor and business and needs executives. Martyrs always feel that they are doing favors for labor, and these executives should be given to understand that they are well paid for their work. I would establish terms of four or six years, too, so that they wouldn't have to spend all their time in office compromising, chiseling and campaigning for reelection.

Would Abolish Excessive Dues

I WOULD abolish the extortionate initiation fees and excessive dues now required in the A. F. of L. and get down to the level of the C. I. O. The permit racket would be abolished, too. This is the racket whereby musclemen in the executive spots license nonunion men to do union work and steal the license fees, while union members walk the streets. Under this system it is better to be a non-union man than a member in good standing, and permit men are carried permanently on the permit basis so that they will kick in regularly to the grafters.

All officers who handle money would be placed under bond, which would mean that criminals would be automatically excluded from such positions, because they are not acceptable risks. And I would not wait for local prosecutors or the Department of Justice to take the initiative in cases of graft, assault or murder, but would demand that they take action for labor's own good.

I wouldn't denounce public officials as enemies of labor for proceeding against crooks in the unions. Prosecutors, being politicians, hesitate to go after union racketeers, even when they have good evidence, because they are afraid of being smeared as enemies of labor at election time.

Would Comb Out Known Racketeers

IF AN EMPLOYER reported a union official or agent for demanding money to prevent or end a strike or to stand off or compromise a proposed increase in the wage scale I would protect the employer from reprisals and press the prosecution.

Of course, I would comb out all the known racketeers and whitegraft chiselers of the present official roster. That would include not only the low types, such as Bioff and Scalese, but anyone with a side line of insurance or supplies who could be shown to have done business with an employer. Side lines would be absolutely out. If the salary for the job were not sufficient for the man I would get another man. In this way I would prevent grafters from using their labor connections to promote their private interests.

I would abandon the pretense that the A. F. of L. didn't know that criminals and non-criminals but extremely unethical grafters were high up in the organization, admit that this condition developed in the rough-and-ready days of unionism and in the rowdy scuffle with the C. I. O. and, in a manner of speaking, take a plea. I would simply say that those days were gone and that we had now turned square.

Never again would I permit the A. F. of L. to dishonor labor by defending racketeers. It isn't the job of the A. F. of L. to protect racketeers, but to protect labor from racketeers, and by affirming this I would win the confidence of the members, the favor of the general public and peace with victory in the fight with the C. I. O.

Housing Parley Opens Tomorrow

The National Public Housing Conference will open tomorrow for two-day sessions in the Willard Hotel. Final arrangements were completed yesterday by Miss Helen Alfred, executive director.

The conference will be attended by representatives of business, labor, church and social service groups.

Golden Elephant

By Mark Sullivan

The 'Fort Knox Folly'

WE APPROACH an anniversary. It was January 31, 1934, that the Roosevelt Administration began buying gold at $35 an ounce. We are now at the sixth anniversary of that policy and its result.

There it is. Gold—17 billions of it. Nearly two-thirds of all the monetary gold in the world and more piling up. There was never anything like it before. It is stored in a hole in the ground, on a rib of Muldraughs Hill, in Kentucky. Atop the hill is Fort Knox. The soldiers, in the evening, sit on the fortress wall and look down on the treasure they guard, the greatest by far ever brought together in one spot.

It was put there by the New Deal. Back in 1933-1934 they had a happy idea. They were going to raise the prices of everything, especially farm crops—"Raise them we will," said President Roosevelt. Some one told them they could raise the prices of anything by first raising the price of gold. So they raised gold. For generations the government price had been $20.67 an ounce. Ostentatiously the New Deal announced to all the world that the United States Treasury would pay $35 an ounce. They have kept gold "pegged" at that price ever since.

But that was about the only price that went up and stayed up. Other prices went their own way, many downward. But that is only part of the story.

Like Cornering A Tidal Wave

MEANWHILE complex economic influences, together with the $35 price, started something which has led to search of the dictionary for words implying size and force. The condition started an avalanche, a flood. Gold came in streams from governments and banks in Europe; in trickles from mines in Asia and Africa. Individuals sent us their caches. The Bombay metal merchants and hoarders, with stores of gold they had held for generations and had never expected to part with, smiled their inscrutable smile of a trader who knows he is getting the best of a foolish buyer. A European statesman, when we created conditions drawing gold to America, said to the writer of this column: "They'll drown you in gold; you'll strangle with it; you'll go on your knees to ask us to take it off you."

It's a white elephant, a golden elephant. A dead elephant, or at least an elephant under ether. For the New Deal, when they realized it might do harm, "sterilized" it. Though it had been money, and though we had paid money for it, they made it not money. It is beginning to be called the "Fort Knox Folly."

But it is not a dead thing. Though made inert for the time, it is highly explosive. If not kept under ether it might be an elephant amuck in our china shop of prices, business and industry. Our "corner" of gold is as if we had cornered a force of nature, a tide or a wind. Having got it, we don't know what to do with it. And we have become seriously nervous about what it may do to us.

Value In Future Is Unpredictable

NO ONE KNOWS the answer. On my desk is a stack of books and pamphlets a foot high. I can make nothing of them. What one recommends as panacea the other denounces as poison. I have asked men who might know. The more able the man, the more reluctant to answer. The difficulty is, you can't take a step about gold as an action standing alone. Anything we do about gold must be part of a larger program, including other matters.

An able authority is Mr. E. A. Goldenweiser, gold expert of the Federal Reserve Board. (By a curious relation of name and occupation, "Goldenweiser" implies "wise about gold.") He has written an article in which the following passages occur. The reader must understand I have detached particular phrases which reflect the special quality of almost mysterious uncertainty which our gold problem presents. The whole of Mr. Goldenweiser's article, "The Gold Problem Today," is in the Federal Reserve Bulletin for January:

"In this country today, gold constitutes a problem" . . . "An asset which is of little value now and whose value in future in unpredictable" . . . "Any method that could be devised for controlling the situation . . . would require a departure from our habits of mind and our ways of doing business" . . . "No simple solution can be devised."

Halt In Purchasing Would Create Chaos

WE CAN'T EVEN just let go the tail of our elephant. Dr. Goldenweiser says: "An abrupt cessation of American gold purchases would create chaotic conditions."

But if we do nothing, still more gold will come. Some predict (though this is hard to believe) that when we have about all the monetary gold there is, the other nations of the world may defend themselves. They may say: "We won't use gold as a basis for currency any more." If the demand for gold as money ceased to exist, there would remain only the ordinary commercial demand, for tooth fillings, ornaments and the like.

We would be like a poker player who has won all the chips. When he tries to cash in, the banker says he is sorry, but it has been decided not to give cash for chips any more. In that case, the successful accumulator might make such use of those blue and red disks as he could. We in our situation might give our golden chips to our wives to wear as earrings and bracelets—mementos of a New Deal experiment.

House Sustains Ohio Fund Veto

Jenkins said. "We had been assured that this legislation would have the green light. Somewhere along the line, something has happened."

After Speaker Bankhead and announced the vote, Jenkins told reporters that he considered the measure "dead until we get a Republican President." He termed the veto a "clear steal."

And in Columbus, Ohio, Gov. Bricker, frequently mentioned Republican Presidential candidate who recently had a sharp quarrel with the Administration over the Ohio WPA, rapped the President again.

The President has "no interest in Ohio's old-age pensioners—only a selfish desire to exercise political power," Bricker said in a statement which denounced "the willingness of the New Deal to sabotage humanitarian principles whenever it can serve its own selfish political purposes by so doing."

In the House debate, Representative Secrest (Democrat), of Ohio, was one of those who insisted that the row over Ohio's old-age assistance administration was nothing but "a pure political fight" between Martin L. Davey, then Democratic Governor, and officials in Washington.

"A clean Republican Governor (Bricker) has corrected every abuse that was charged," declared Representative Vorys (Republican), of Ohio, adding that "the guiltless" are to be penalized in order "to strike terror in the hearts of all who question the rulings of the central bureaucracy."

"That is the policy of Hitler," he asserted.

On the other hand, Representative Woodrum (Democrat), of Virginia, told the House that "I can't imagine a more serious blow at social security than this bill."

Barefoot Boy, Modernized

"The 'Barefoot Boy' of Whittier has been tabooed by the Children's Bureau. Twelve hundred copies of a report of the White House Conference on Children were ready when Miss Katherine F. Lenroot, head of the bureau, ripped off the covers because they depicted three healthy youngsters romping in their bare feet."—News item.)

Blessings on thee, little man,
Barefoot boy with cheek of tan!
(What a thought! 'Twill never do
In this land of nations new);
With thy turned-up pantaloons
And thy merry whistled tunes—(Pantaloons! Say that must go!
We've an era new, you know;
Make those trousers long enough,
And cut out that turned-up stuff!)
With thy red lips, redder still,
Kissed by strawberries on the hill
(Those lines we cannot allow;
That hill is a project now);
With the sunshine on thy face
Through the torn brim's jaunty grace—
(Out with torn brim stuff like that!
Give that kid a brand-new hat!)

* * * *

From my heart I give thee joy—
I was once a barefoot boy;
(If it was it was before
F. D. R. came through the door);
Prince thou art; the grown-up man
Only is Republican—(Horrors! Give those line the sack!
That's a dirty Tory crack!)

* * * *

Let the million-dollared ride!
(If they do they'd better hide);
Barefoot, trudging at his side,
Thou hast more than he can buy—
(That, by golly, is no lie!)
Outward shine, inward joy—
Put some shoes on, barefoot boy!

* * * *

Oh, for boyhood's painless play,
Sleep that wakes in laughing day. .
(That in print we will allow;
Play and sleep go big, and how!)
Health that mocks the doctor's rules,
Knowledge never learned in schools
Of the wild bee's morning chase,
Of the wild flower's time and place,
Flight of fowl and habitude
Of the tenants of the wood—
(Stop! Those tenants needn't live
In the woods on what we give!)
How the robin feeds her young,
How the oriole's nest is hung—
(Anybody know, to wit:
Federal boards attend to it!)
Oh, for boyhood's time in June,
Crowding years in one brief moon!
I was rich in flowers and trees,
Hummingbirds and honey bees—
(Printer, give that "rich" the bird—
We don't like it as a word!)
And as your horizon grew
Larger grew your riches, too—
(Riches! There he goes again—
Whittier's an awful pain!)
Help!

Today And Tomorrow

By Walter Lippmann

The Porcupine And Other Animals

THERE ARE three big measures before Congress and each is concerned with the unknown future. There is the budget covering a period which does not even begin until July 1 next and then extends until the middle of the summer after next summer. There is the defense bill which, as regards the navy at least, looks ahead for four years, almost to the end of the administration which succeeds this administration. And there is the extension of the power to negotiate the trade agreements, a power which is now related chiefly to the kind of social order we shall live in after the war. Congress, in other words, is not dealing with the immediate situation, but with the situation as it is going to be.

For the moment it is not only on the western front, but also in the capital of the United States that there is a stagnant lull. It is plain, however, that this lull is temporary, and that the situation as it is now will not long remain as it is now. If the war becomes violent, obviously there will be immense consequences not only in the fighting zone itself but on all our foreign relations and on the economic position and upon the political opinions and the feelings of the people. Even if the war continues for another year or more to be a siege and a diplomatic maneuver, it is bound to cause an increasing dislocation throughout the world. The American cotton which can find no ships, the American ships which can find no profitable cargoes, the American tobacco which can find no purchasers, are only the faint preliminary indications of what this war, even in its first and rather quiet phase, can do.

Greatest Crisis Of Modern Times

BUT CONGRESS is committed to the view that this country is insulated because Congress would prefer it to be isolated. It is committed to the view that this country is so self-contained and so self-sufficient that it cannot be affected vitally by what happens; but also that the country is so immature, so gullible, and has such a giddy mind that it dare not trust itself to consider what may happen, and that if it lets itself begin thinking about the issues and possible consequences of the greatest crisis of modern times, it will be bamboozled by the ghost of Lord Northcliffe.

So the administration is afraid to tell Congress and the public what it knows and what it thinks, and Congress is afraid to listen, even in private, lest it be assailed by troublesome doubts. "Don't tell me any more about Finland," said one legislator to a man who called on him. "I do not want to believe in something which is not consistent with what my constituents think I believe. After all, I have to preserve my intellectual integrity."

Naturally, then, Congress is moving in an atmosphere of unreality, having fled from reality and locked and bolted the doors behind it.

Working a Jig-Saw Puzzle In The Dark

THUS, SINCE NO ONE is able to foresee, nor willing seriously to consider, what will be the real situation from six months to eighteen months hence, the budget is being made, at the White House and at the capitol and in both party caucuses, with a view to placating those who wish to economize without alienating those who make claims on the Treasury.

The budget is not being debated with a view to preparing the country to withstand the shocks and dislocations that the war is certain to produce; not even the administration appears to have made up its mind whether, with the Treasury, it is preparing against war inflation or, with the White House, it is still trying to inflate for recovery from depression. The result is a discussion which strongly resembles an attempt to do a jig-saw puzzle in a dark room.

The national defense is being examined on the basis of a plan which would actually be completed in 1944. But Congress was startled, and rather resentful, when Admiral Stark had the candor to tell it that the adequacy of the navy depends on whether we are preparing to defend the United States in one ocean or in two oceans, against one enemy or against a coalition, alone or with allies, in a world where a victorious Nazi-Communist combination had made an alliance with Japan and Italy, or in a world in which Great Britain and France had defeated the totalitarian states. The nerves of Congress are not, at the moment, strong enough to endure such unpleasant considerations.

And, therefore, Congress has no measure by which it can possibly judge whether the naval program is too big, too small, or adequate. All Congress can do will be, presumably, to authorize as large a fleet as the existing shipyards can construct, and then hope that this will suffice under any and all circumstances.

Blankness of Mind On Trade Tactics

THE TRADE AGREEMENTS involve the whole profound question of whether the influence of the United States is to be used to preserve the system of free enterprise or to promote, inadvertently but inexorably, a system of nationally regimented socialism. But the question is being debated as if Congress were making a tariff in the year 1896. Mr. Hull has said some few things, his opponents nothing at all, on the subject of American commercial policy in the post-war reconstruction. Though that is the heart of the question, there is a total blankness of mind on the subject, on what is going to happen to the price level, to our markets, to the balance of payments, to our hoard of gold, to the currency, to taxes, and to employment, as the war dislocates commerce and exhausts the people of Europe and Asia.

Congress has decided not to think about such matters, and to put our own house in order, as the orators love to say, by sweeping the difficult problems under the carpet.

Mr. Dewey told us the other day that in place of the American Eagle, he would for the time being prefer to adopt as our national animal, the porcupine. This is, if I may say so, quite a come-down even from the elephant, which is wise and has a long memory, and from the bull moose, which is a noble if contentious animal, and from the donkey, which is useful and a good friend to man. Still, the porcupine has his qualities. But, for the time being, not even the porcupine could be adopted by consent of Congress. He would have to give way to the sloth, an animal which symbolizes that aversion from mental activity which the moralists of the church have identified as one of the seven deadly sins.

Partisan Politics Dominate Issues

YET NATURE, as we know, abhors a vacuum, and even in the capital of a great nation, even in a stagnant and confusing pause in the swift movement of history, politicians have to think about something and act accordingly. That something in Washington today is, of course, the next election. It is the all important controlling consideration on both sides of the two houses and at both ends of Pennsylvania avenue. There are individuals, of course, who have not fled from reality and know that the only good politics a year hence will have been a cool, discerning statesmanship now. But they do not control the political situation.

The plain and all-too-evident fact is that the country is being governed, not by a view of its vital interests in an era of enormous historic importance, but by the campaign strategy of the two parties; and that the questions which statesmen are concerned about have become, since approximately January 1, tactical pieces, pawns, in the party strategy. That is what has happened to the cause of Finland, for example, and that is what is happening to every other question, including the budget and taxes and the trade agreements and even, I regret to say, certain aspects of foreign policy.

The party strategy is in itself normal and, if this were not a time when men need to be somewhat above their normal selves, there would be no ground for criticism. Though not all would agree with this view, I believe that the great virtue of the American party system is that it unifies the country. After a period of sharp contention, the approach of a national election causes the factions in each party to sink their differences and to unite. It then causes the two parties, when united, to blur the issues which divided them. Thus, as the country approaches the conventions and even more as it approaches the elections, the political issues become more and more a question of tweedledum and tweedledee.

For my own part I rejoice in the fact that the issues which divide the voters between elections become deflated when they have to choose a president. I should not like to see the unity of this nation subjected to the strain of an election in which the issue between the two parties was profound and perhaps irreconcilable, and I regard it as a sign that our democracy is healthy when people say just before election that they cannot tell the difference between a Republican and a Democrat. For I think there is no conceivable issue which could be settled better, on the contrary that all issues would be settled worse, if the underlying unity of the nation were impaired.

The Price of Unity Seen Exorbitant

BUT THIS UNITY is now being paid for at an exorbitant price, at the price not only of evading but even of refusing to think about the great questions of our time. If that is the price that has to be paid, I would pay it rather than subject the country to the furies of a demagogue's election campaign.

But I cannot believe that it is necessary to pay such a high price, that we can achieve our national unity only on the low level of evasion and abdication in the face of momentous questions. I do not think we are pleased with ourselves when we reduce matters that involve the greatest things to tactical maneuvers in an election, and that when we look back we shall not be very proud of ourselves to confess that in the world as it was in 1940, the controlling consideration in our conduct was partisan politics.

Scandinavians Arrive to Discuss Airline From U. S.

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Jan. 24.—Negotiations between Scandinavians and officials in Washington on the establishment of a transatlantic airline between New York and Stavanger, Norway, will be opened within a few days.

Five postal and airline officials from Norway, Sweden and Denmark arrived here today on the United States liner Manhattan to confer with Federal agencies in Washington, and with private air operators and plane manufacturers. They emphasized that the project was in its early stages, but it was strongly indicated that experimental flights might be started within a few months.

The five men were Capt. Leif Villars-Dahl, of the Norwegian air line, D. N. L.; Arne Krog, Danish postal official; Capt. Knud Lybye, of the Danish line, D. D. L.; P. A. Norlin, of the Swedish airlines, and Olav Olson, Swedish postal official.

Other examinations announced: Associate and assistant aeronautical inspector, $3,500 and $3,200; Civil Aeronautics Authority, electrical mechanic (floor scrubbing and polishing machines), $1,860; Federal Works Agency; X-ray crystallographer, $2,600, Geological Survey.

Text Of President's Message On Veto

I am returning herewith, without my approval, a bill (H. R. 5118) entitled, "An Act for the Relief of the State of Ohio."

In October, 1938, the Social Security Board withheld from the State of Ohio the payments that would have otherwise been made to the State under the old-age assistance provisions of the Social Security act. The Social Security Board is empowered by law to withhold the certification of any amount due to any State, in the event that the board finds, after notice and hearing, that such State has failed substantially to comply with any provision required by law to be included in the plan.

Investigations made by the board prior to September, 1938, indicated the existence of certain important defects in the administration of the old-age assistance plan in the State of Ohio. A hearing on this subject was thereupon called by the board and held on September 6, 1938. The proper State authorities received notice of the hearing, but failed to attend. As a result of testimony introduced in that proceeding, the Social Security Board made detailed findings showing that there had been in the operation of the Ohio State plan for old-age assistance, a lack of efficient administration, wholesale violation of the State civil service laws and rules, delays in the handling of applications for assistance, blanket increases in some awards while at the same time aid was denied to other needy applicants, discrimination in the handling of complaints, a faulty accounting system, and non-compliance with reporting provisions and with the requirement of fair hearings to aggrieved applicants.

In accordance with these findings the payment due to the State for October, 1938, was withheld. The State then made October payments out of its own treasury to individual beneficiaries listed by the State authorities. The purpose of the bill under consideration is to reimburse the State for the amount of money thus withheld by the Federal Government.

The Social Security act constitutes legislation of major importance. It has far-reaching permanent consequences in the interest of the welfare of the aged and the needy. Most of the phases of the Social Security act involve cooperation between the Federal Government and the State. Efficiency of administration must, therefore, be present both in the Federal and the State agencies. The Congress, in order to secure adherence to proper standards on the part of the State governments, has clothed the Social Security Board with the definite duty of causing a withholding of payments from the States, in the event that they fail to comply.

It is not seriously questioned that the action of the Social Security Board in withholding payment in the present instance was well founded. The enactment of this legislation would in effect render nugatory in this instance the salutary provision of the Social Security act which accords the Federal Government the sole means of assuring an effective administration and disposition of funds granted by it to the States under the Social Security act.

I am withholding my approval of the bill under consideration because of my belief that an expeditious, effective and non-political administration of the provisions of the Social Security act is indispensable to the conduct of operations thereunder, and that approval of the measure would be inconsistent with this objective and create a precedent that would seriously endanger the success of the entire Social Security program.

If this bill were to become law it would at least make it possible for a State agency to violate Civil Service laws, to give blanket increases to some and deny aid to other needy applicants, to discriminate in the handling of complaints and to maintain a faulty accounting system, all with the belief that if the Social Security Board were to withhold Federal funds because of this, the State agency could later go to the Congress of the United States and receive a special appropriation in proportion to the amounts the State had put out.

The State authorities would have this bill as a precedent. It is needless for me to say that if I were to sign this bill the precedent of it could be extended to other forms of Federal aid—aid for the highways, aid for widows and aid for dependent or crippled children. It would mean that States no longer would be compelled to maintain the standards set up by the Congress, but could violate these standards with impunity and still get their money.

I do not think that the provision by which the Social Security Board would "ascertain the total of the sums disbursed by the State of Ohio . . . with respect to each aged needy individual eligible" is in any way a practical method of determining at this late date the individual merits of each particular case. Undoubtedly many of the individual payments were proper but, on the other hand, a very large number were undoubtedly improper or discriminatory—and a still further number of needy persons who ought to have received compensation received none at all. To reopen thousands of individual cases a year and a half later, and to investigate each one separately would be tremendously expensive.

It seems to me that the disapproval of this bill will serve notice on every State in the Union that all kinds of Federal aid must be conditioned on full compliance with the Federal law and wholly without discrimination or inefficiency.

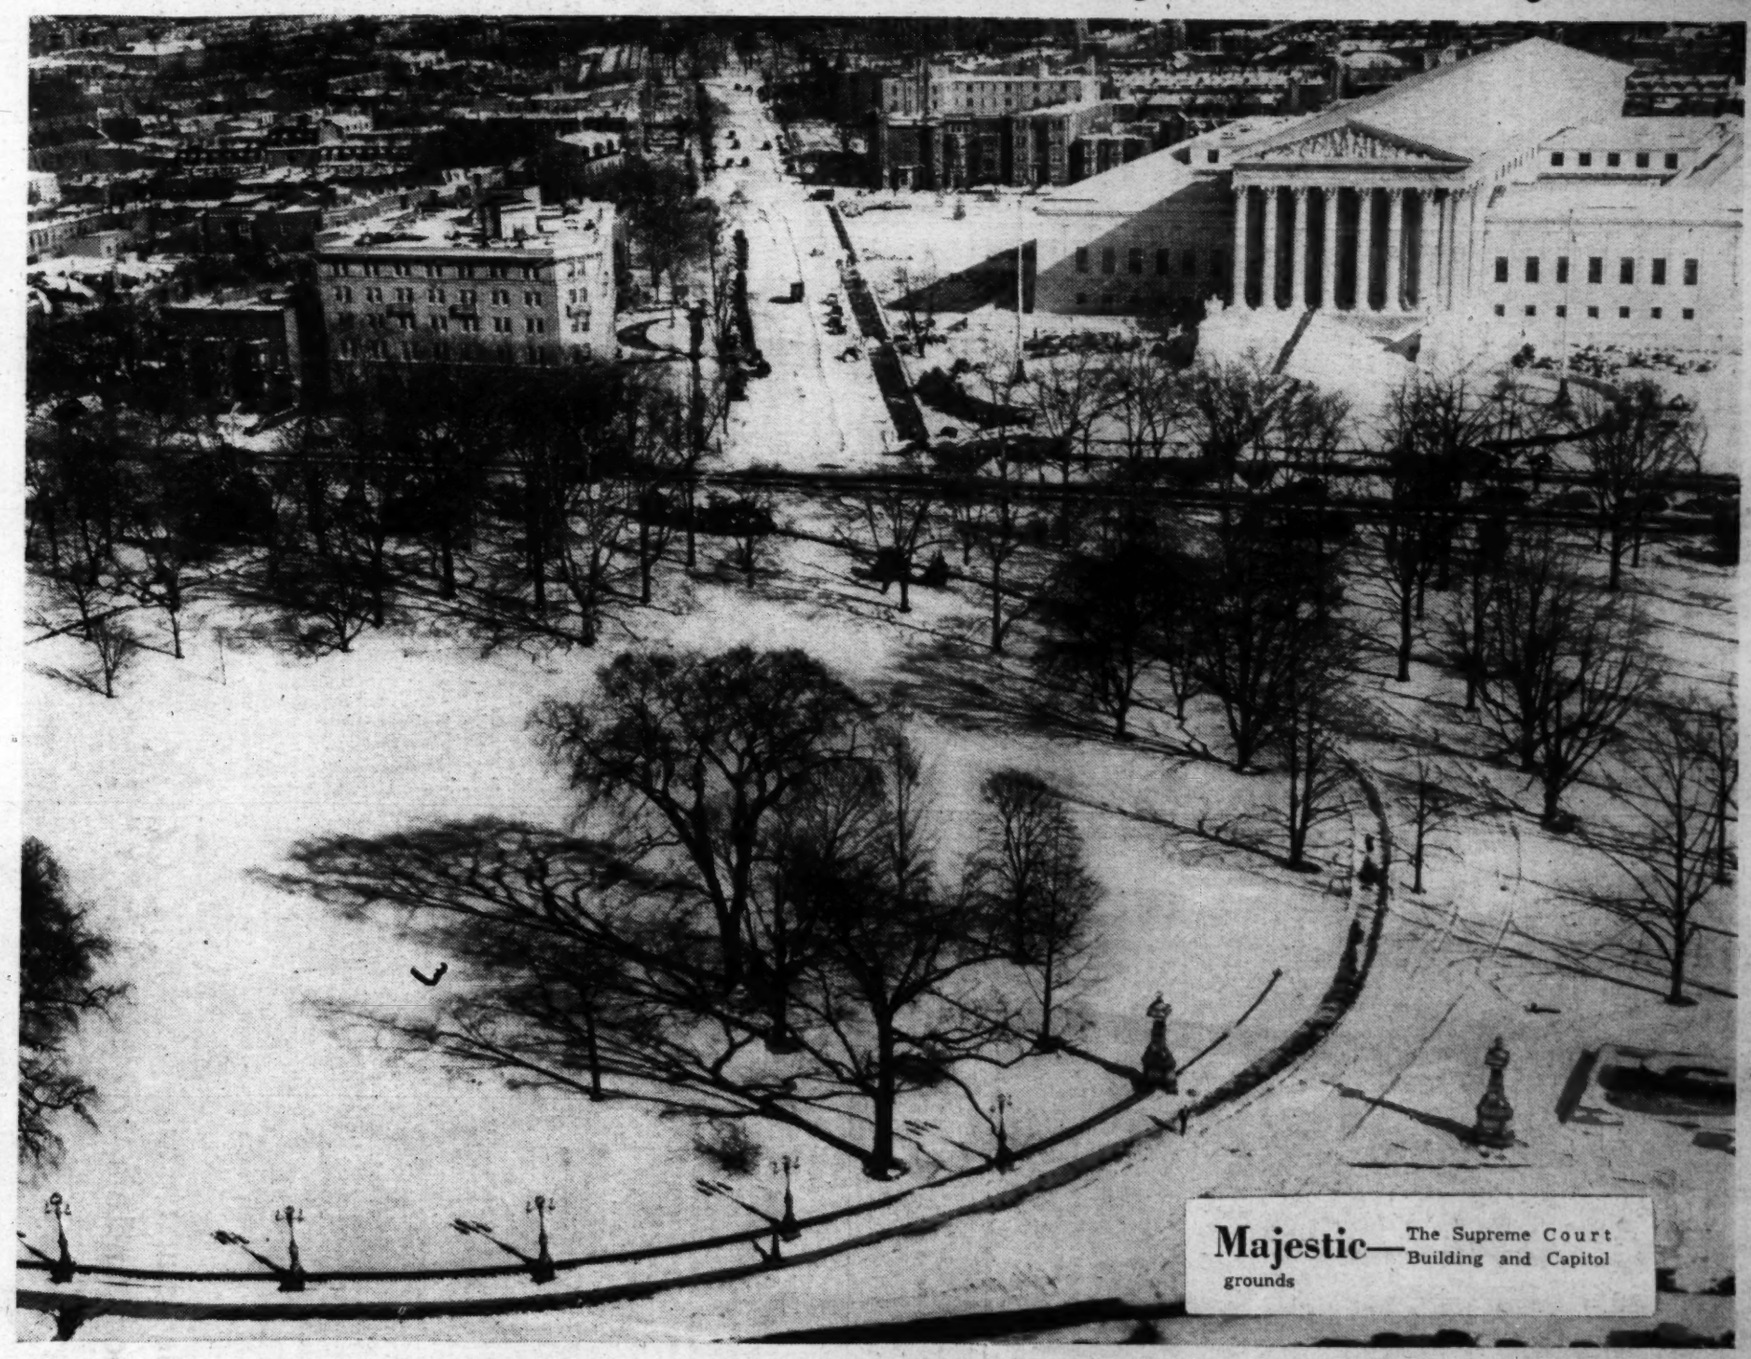
Washington Shivers Under Heavy Blanket of Snow

Blanketed—The Mall from the Capitol Dome



Majestic—The Supreme Court Building and Capitol grounds

Behind It All—The District yesterday sent about 2,100 workers with 314 trucks and 45 snow plows onto the street to dig Washington out of the 9½ inches of snow that began falling at dusk Tuesday. Before the battle against the snow is over, at least 8,300 men will be employed at a cost estimated at $20,000 to the District alone

A 9.5-inch snowstorm came out of the South yesterday and gave Washington some first-hand knowledge of what winter usually means three months out of the year to cities of the North.

For a few hours in the morning the city's transportation system was almost paralyzed, and few automobiles were able to leave their parking spaces.

For example, only a handful of workers in each Government department arrived at work on time, and officials estimated that at least 25 per cent stayed home. Attendance at schools was so low and transportation to and from home at the lunch hour so uncertain that most classrooms were closed at noon.

Things She Doesn't Tell Him

That she signed up to buy a set of books on "What Every Smart Woman Should Know" at the rate of $1 a week for the next five years while under the impression that the smooth salesman was really "giving" her the books.

That she inclosed a $5 bill in her last letter to the sister who married the worthless brother-in-law.

That she agreed under pressure to serve as chairman of the ways and means committee of her club for another year.

That she exchanged the $15 perfume he got for Christmas (on suggestion of his secretary) for a flannel bath robe, a new coffee percolator, a carpet sweeper and some new underwear for the children.

That she paid $3.50 for a 2-inch-high jar of Magic Rejuvenating throat cream that a demonstrator at a cosmetic counter talked her into taking.

That she had to take back another pair of shoes that "did a lot" for her feet while she tried them on in the store.

That she gave his old moth-eaten smoking jacket he hadn't used for ten years to the laundress to make into a sweater for her little boy.

That the meat pie she served for dinner was made from the left-over roast of the day before.

That the new hair tonic he has been trying hasn't been making any appreciable change in his bald spot.

That the old sweetheart she ran on to downtown had gotten a "watermelon" front, had specks of dandruff on his coat collar and needed his teeth fixed.

That he ate chili and a chocolate eclair at noon despite his doctor's orders to lay off condiments and sweets.

That downtown he happened to run on to Miss Lintpicker, who used to work for his firm, and that she acted so friendly and so glad to see him he invited her to have a cocktail.

That he stopped in to see the new 1940 Speedbeater models—just in case he might decide it really wouldn't pay to buy new tires and "everything" for his old 1938 car.

That he saw his staid and proper neighbor next door downtown seemingly absorbed in a blonde cutie.

That he lost his temper and gave his secretary a "bawling out" she didn't deserve.

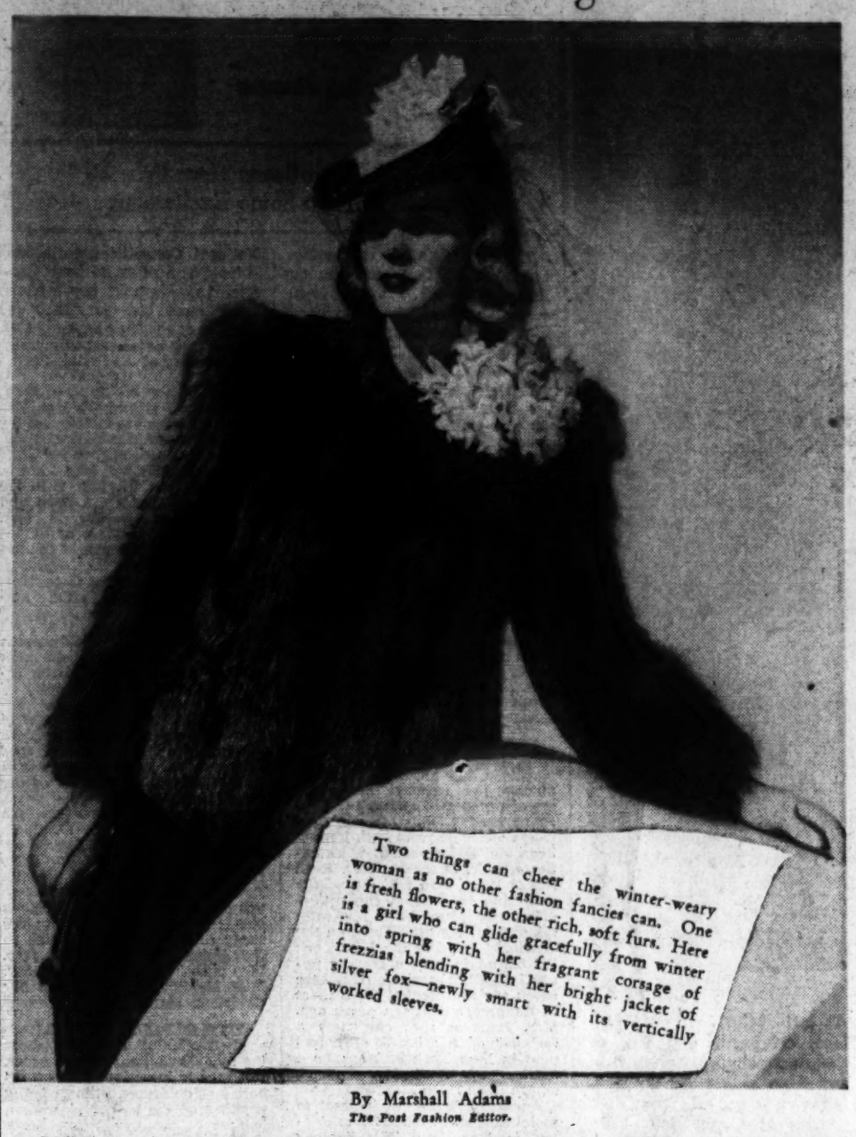
Silver Fox 'Dripping' Is Now Possible For Women on Economical Budgets



Two things can cheer the winter-weary woman as no other fashion fancies can. One is fresh flowers, the other rich, soft furs. Here is a girl who can glide gracefully from winter into spring with her fragrant corsage of frezzias blending with her bright jacket of silver fox—newly smart with its vertically worked sleeves.

By Marshall Adams
The Post Fashion Editor.

GOOD news for the girl on a budget with a hankering for luxury is the fact that silver fox skins are at their lowest price in the 30 years that "silvers" have reigned as queens of the long-haired dress furs.

The world's finest pelts from Norway, Sweden and Canada have been unloaded on these shores due to embargoes and trade restrictions—unfortunate for foreign trappers, but advantageous for the woman who has always wanted good quality silver foxes yet couldn't afford them at their former prices. Far-sighted furriers last fall gobbled up long-haired skins which during January and early February will be sold as low as $100 a pair.

This modest price differs greatly from the $400 to $750 price tags affixed to the then rare skins some 30 years ago. Prices will probably climb after the middle of February when women will seriously consider the fur piece to finish off their Easter ensemble, so the moral is—buy now.

Continued embargoes may jump prices higher within another year. The newest neckpieces feature heads worked in shoulder swirls or draped affects. The silver fox stole is virtually a thing of the past, having proved too matronly for most tastes. Incidentally, continuous stroking of stoles or scraves dulls the silver luster and shortens the fur's life . . . Boleros and chubbies are modest in price and more practical than last year's bracelet-length sleeved models—the new sleeves being full length and cut from only one long vertical skin.

Stylists Discover America in New Home Furnishings

By Elizabeth MacRae Boykin

The designers are discovering America all over again, and therefore the new lines of home furnishings include delightful and exciting colors or designs of American inspiration. So get the house ready to receive all sorts of local color.

A new line of rugs takes its colors from the American landscape, some of the popular tones being Maine pine tone, Florida coral, California gold, Michigan cherry blossom, New Yorks' Hudson blue, and so on.

Fabrics are also turning to the American scene for design interest. One of the loveliest new chintzes is a California hibiscus pattern, while the southern accent will be seen in many charming new washable chintzes, such as "Deep South," an abundant all-over pattern of roses (which may also be had in permanent finish organdy to match the chintz). The popularity of New England colonial cotton prints, so simple and modest, so utterly livable, continues in favor, but colonial designs from other sections are turning up, such as the French colonial influence from New Orleans and the Pennsylvania Dutch documents with their informal brightness. Later settlers, such as the Swedish in Minnesota and the Balkan peoples around Chicago are also contributing to the panorama of American design.

American pottery, especially that from the west coast, is having an enormous popularity, and its informal colors and designs are thoroughly American or American with a Spanish accent. By contrast, for those who desire a more formal sort of simplicity, the Williamsburg influence is going to replace much of the English and continental designs that have been standard stock, for the revolutionary note will be strong in decoration during the coming season, as European imports diminish. There will be, in addition to pottery and porcelain of definite design heritages, many scenics, both modern and colonial, that use familiar American places as their theme, some historical, some contemporary. And map design plates, showing American harbors, American rivers and lakes, will be seen, along with plates decorated with State flowers.

Reducing Is Not Necessarily Cause of 'Hollywood' Anemia

Diet With Proper Nutritive Substances Has No Danger; Fads Cause Trouble; Keeping Fat Does Not Make for Fitness

By Ida Jean Kain

IN HOLLYWOOD, anything that ever happens to a star's health is blamed on the fact or fancy that she has dieted to reduce! Often there is some truth in these rumors. Since the camera exaggerates size, a screen star must keep her weight down. Unless carefully planned, the highly restricted diet that is followed almost continuously could result in anemia.

A perfect example of ultra-streamlining is found in Carol Lombard's figure, the height for her 112 pounds being 5 feet 5½ inches

But that does not make weight reduction and anemia synonymous! Nor does it follow that if you keep fat you keep fit! There are as many fat people bordering on anemia as there are thin ones.

Any diet that is deficient in the substances necessary for the formation of hemoglobin, which is the red coloring matter of the blood, will lead to nutritional anemia—whether or not you are getting enough calories. The materials needed for the formation of the red blood cells are, principally, iron, copper and protein. On a reducing diet which supplies these elements in normal amounts, you are in no danger of developing anemia.

Mecca for Faddists

Because of the emphasis on slimness in the movies, Hollywood is a mecca for food faddists. They flock out there with their peculiar diets which promise slimness, beauty and a magnetic personality. In 1938, for example, the uncooked vegetable fad was rampant. This diet entirely eliminated meat, eggs and milk, and it would most certainly lead to anemia and a lot of other troubles. Those three foods supply protein, calcium, phosphorus and iron, the elements which are essential to any good diet. These foods, plus fruits, vegetables, cheese, butter and whole grains, form the backbone of any safe diet.

If you diet properly, you can actually build up the red blood cells as you lose the useless fat. A good reducing diet is often higher in the protective foods than the average menu, for more stress is placed on these foods as the calories are restricted.

To assure the adequacy of a highly restricted diet, vitamin and mineral concentrates can be used. Any diet that is limited to 800 or 1,000 calories should be supplemented by a Vitamin A, B, C, G concentrate and by a mineral concentrate containing calcium, phosphorus and iron.

Protection Feasible

Fruit Appetizer

An unusual and very refreshing fruit appetizer is made by placing balls of avocado in grapefruit halves. Remove the centers of grapefruit, loosen each segment and remove every other one—these can be used later in salad or appetizer combinations. Spread with thick French dressing and chill. Cut out globules of avocado, cover them with more dressing and a little lemon juice. Chill. When time to serve, tuck the avocado in the spaces of the grapefruit. Dress up with cress.

Mary Haworth's Mail

Man, 32, College Graduate In Government Service, Finds Girl Co-Workers Dull; He Craves Contact With "Higher Type Social Set;" How Achieve It?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: With what groups or organizations in Washington could I associate or affiliate, which might bring me into social contact with the better educated and more refined class of persons? My object would be to enjoy their company and ultimately to meet and marry the type of girl I am looking for.

I am neither a social climber nor a snob. I am a man 32 years of age, a college graduate with some graduate work, have a speaking knowledge of domestic and foreign affairs; am "socially conscious," (as the phrase goes) in my thinking; am supposed to be well mannered and congenial and not too bad looking.

Now, why do I have no contacts with the higher type of "younger set" here? I work in the Government service at a salary of nearly $200 a month. The only girls I meet are those in the service, and with all due respect to them, I can conjure up interest only in a few. Occasionally I meet a girl who is quick witted and thus mentally and emotionally stimulating—but usually there is so much wanting in beauty that the interest wanes.

I share a house with six other fellows ranging in ages from 25 to 30, and the fact that all of them have a similar problem convinces me that the fault is not ours; that we cannot be dismissed as "misfit" personalities. It is not that we aspire to follow the social trails of the diplomats, or become members of "little cabinets," but only that we want to meet accomplished, cultured girls recently graduated from college or in the last year of college . . . I cannot help but feel that this is a "community" problem, which warrants serious discussion. Very truly yours, B. F. B.

Complaint Brings Many Proverbs to Mind

DEAR B. F. B.: In thinking over your complaint, numerous proverbs come to mind, such as, for instance, "The Lord helps those who help themselves;" "Water seeks its own level;" "Birds of a feather flock together;" "You can lead a horse to water but you cannot make him drink;" "There are none so blind as those who will not see," etc., etc.

All of which means, I fancy, that I have an intense conviction that the person who drifts through life like a shadow—rootless and lacking vital companionship, nursing the theory that his loneliness is due to the fact that he is circumstantially shut out of a Special Kingdom of Superior People who are his Spiritual Kin and Social Counterparts—is a person who will find the true explanation by looking in the mirror.

In outlining your specifications for companionship, you hasten to add that you are neither a snob nor a social climber. That's what you think. I'm not sure it's so. For this I know—the wise man and genuine democrat looks primarily for associates whose personalities impart the ring of reality. He does not seek, as you do, initiation into "the higher type of 'younger set'" in a given locality, nor does he stalk the "better educated and more refined persons," since he knows both intuitively and by instructive experience that "one's own kind" of people aren't found in dozen packages, as it were, on a given social shelf.

He knows they are hiden treasure, which reveals itself to him who adventures in friendship for the adventure's sake. They crop up delightfully, unexpectedly, like a flowering tree blooming in an alien clime; like the pearl in the oyster; like a nugget of gold half hidden in baser minerals—usually in different guises at the end of different roads.

In my opinion, you are oversimplifying your problem in thinking the solution will be found forthwith in affiliating yourself with one or several handpicked groups or organizations,—although such a step would be, of course, a move in the right direction. You need, rather, to push back your social horizon in every direction.

The logical way to "make contacts" with persons of comparable tastes and talents is by engaging in as many avocational activities of varied kinds as your leisure and purse permit. What are your intellectual and recreational interests? Do you dance, golf, debate, paint, sing, support church work, keep in touch with political trends "back home," etc.? How is your "social consciousness" expressed? Are you making a single positive gesture to relieve the plight of the underprivileged at home or the oppressed abroad? Or does your awareness of "domestic and foreign affairs" spend itself in collegiate bull sessions?

It is my guess that you are sitting by the fireside, figuratively and perhaps literally speaking, waiting for Providence to supply you with a Feminine Complement of such grace, distinction and tonic mentality that she will bring you directly (and by indirection) to the world's attention. And the irony of it is that the girls you would hail in that capacity would be expecting the man of their choice to render a similar service to them.

As I see it, the only way to put across the deal you have in mind is to pull yourself up by your bootstraps out of your do-nothing reverie; and multiply your acquaintances, male and female, through such social mediums as your State society, your college affiliations, political party work, welfare activities on behalf of the needy at home and abroad, church membership and support of the church's program, and such cultural and recreational pursuits as appeal most vividly to you. By branching out enthusiastically in so many directions, you cannot fail to bump up against innumerable congenial persons of magnetic vitality who will open up as many new worlds to you. M. H.

Pictures Add Warmth to Room If Correctly Hung

Pictures, if hung right, add warmth and intimacy to a room. Even the most formal of rooms often can stand a "lift" that comes with a decorative picture being properly hung. Miriam Thomson, in the February House Beautiful, lays down the following principles—or tricks—that help the eye balance a picture:

1—Never hang pictures at uneven heights, like steps, except on a stairway. Try to group them in relation to the piece of furniture beneath. Height is determined in proportion to the room and the things in it.

6—The proportion of the size of any picture to the wall on which it hangs is vital, and so is its shape. Over a large object, such as a sofa, try to use a horizontally-shaped picture. This will diminish the area of bare wall and effect a comfortable sense of balance.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

Manhattan Just Collection of Small Towns; Residents Mostly Hibernating Home Folk

New York, Jan. 24.

HAVE YOU ever wondered why so many visitors to this municipal monkeyhouse crack seriously "Great spot to visit, but I wouldn't live here for a million"? That's the town's oldest gag, by now, and the cause of its birth is simple.

Alice Hughes

The vast majority of our cash customers hole up in a midtown hotel for a few days, do the theaters, night clubs and a few other gay spots like Grant's Tomb. They dwell briefly in the very heart of our madness, feel the nervous loneliness that pervades the entertainment (ha-ha) and shopping districts, but are convinced that they've seen our city. All our citizens, they feel, are carelessly impolite, crackpots who live on Swing alley.

The truth is, of course, that it takes a fairly long residence in one of our scores of completely outfitted areas before any homey feeling is possible. My case is typical. I've lived on Murray Hill for a bit over 15 years. It's my own small town, just as citizens in all the five sprawling boroughs have theirs—most of them completely different, even to speaking various dialects. A Bronxite needs an interpreter and guide when he goes to Brooklyn, if he ever does.

But an old settler like myself has a lot of cozy friends in the neighborhood, and is on easy terms with the butcher, Mr. Greenberg, who also sells an occasional steak to neighbor J. P. Morgan, and with Harry, who waits on trade in the chain grocery. We are old pals with Wally, the cop on the beat, and are extremely clubby with our favorite barman, young Joe, over at Forty-second and Lexington.

As a result old Hall and I are just as much home town folks here as are the citizens of any small, tightly knit town in the Union. And the bright lights are only a 20-minute walk from the front door.

GIRL ABOUT TOWN—Bulletin: Miss Hedy Lamarr, the glorious result of our sex's struggle toward perfection down the centuries, is actually in town, leaving Hollywood in sole possession of her touring company, Miss Joan Bennett. As soon as I can bribe or fight my way into the regal presence, I shall flash you her latest idea on the international situation and the future of the snood.

Household note—Bread is up a penny here, and as we eat about a million loaves a day here simple cyphering tells me that the various boys along the road will cut up another $10,000 a day. Nice going, fellers.

My idea of the happiest gal in New York today is my niece, Barbara, who is back at Cornell after some months at a local university, due to a spot of grade trouble. She loves it far above Cayuga's waters.

VALENTINA has just turned out a gorgeous new concert gown for Lily Pons. It's a drop-shoulder bouffant effect, of white faille, with blue flounces. On her head goes a white tulle tricorne with the same flowers aboard. Some little darling to see, that Pons—even if you don't go for coloratura soprano. I don't, for one. If I want those trills and runs, I'll hire either a canary or a flute player.

I always thought that these magnificent six-foot models who do so much to beautify our city married polo-playing millionaires. But the other day one of the fairest, Rose Marie Smith, married Steve Michelson, jr., who lived next door. Imagine!

SLACK-WEARERS will be tickled with the new one-piece slack suits that have burst out in a store here. Cleverly designed, the thing is fully draped, and the old trouble of keeping the shirt-tail tucked in is completely absent.

Droves Is Word for the Way Society Turns Up for Mrs. Farley's 'At Home'

Rosa Ponselle Draws Special Number Of Music Lovers to Afternoon Party; Congressional, Official Persons Abound

By Hope Ridings Miller.

AN APARTMENT three times the size of the one in which Mrs. James A. Farley, wife of the Postmaster General, had her first "at home" of the season would have been filled to the walls when Capital society called in droves (and I mean droves) yesterday afternoon.

HOPE R. MILLER.

From 4 to 6 o'clock, two spacious rooms and a huge reception hall were jammed with notables who arrived early to pay their respects, leave their cards, and toss off a cup of tea with an official hostess whose visits to Washington are far too few.

Word had rippled around the town that Mrs. Carle Jackson, of New York, better known as Rosa Ponselle, would also be present at the party; so scores of music enthusiasts showed up especially to see her.

A success from any point of view, the reception was well under way ten minutes after the opening hour. Thirty minutes later, you could hardly make your way from the drawing room to the tea table.

Mrs. Farley, who is as charmingly natural as any official hostess I know, had on a becoming black frock, made on simple lines and trimmed with a yoke-effect neckline ornamented with pearls worked into an intricate design. Miss Ponselle, who received with her part of the time, wore a tall, narrow crowned hat with a wide brim and a band of pencil blue crepe to match the panels that accented her black frock. A full skirt, which was neither long nor short, and low-heeled, thick-soled, toeless black shoes were other accents for her costume.

Mrs. George Mesta Among Those Assisting

Generally assisting Mrs. Farley were Mrs. George Mesta, of New York, who had on a metallic blouse over a floor-length black velvet skirt, and Mrs. Daniel G. McKetrick, also of New York.

Taking their turns at the tea table were several wives of post-office officials, including Mrs. Vincent Burke, Mrs. W. W. Howes and Mrs. Ramsey Black. Others who poured were Mrs. Daniel C. Roper, in an all-black outfit, featuring a plumed velvet hat, and a fur neckpiece over a tailored crepe frock; Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, in a becoming pink wool suit; Miss Pauletta Guffey, whose gold lame dress was set off with a bright red turban, and Mrs. Ellen S. Woodward.

Huge vases of salmon gladioli and pink carnations decorated the hall and the drawing room. The tea table, spread with dainties of many varieties, was centered with a towering bouquet of pale yellow snapdragons and acacia.

Miss Betty Hines, who was smartly gowned in a floor-length frock in two shades of gray, set off with a sapphire blue turban, was here, there, and everywhere seeing that the party wheels turned smoothly.

Congressional Circle Well Represented

A listing of who was there would sound very much like several pages from the Congressional Directory, plus a number from the Diplomatic Corps and residential circles. Wives of Senators and Representatives were all over the place, and along toward the latter part of the event a number of men came in to join the party.

Although you would hardly expect spring bonnets to make their first appearance of the season on a day when the town was bogged down in snow, they certainly did yesterday. I saw them all over the place—one of the prettiest being the little black veiled number adorning the pretty blonde head of Mrs. Samuel O. Clark, wife of the Assistant Attorney General.

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies Seen in Throng

Mrs. Joseph E. Davies was among the guests arriving around 5 p. m., when the party was at its height. Mrs. Lawrence Townsend, who is an old friend of Rosa Ponselle, was there much earlier and stayed on for a long talk with the noted singer. Mr. Townsend, who rarely attends afternoon parties, came along before the end to see Miss Ponselle, too.

Mrs. Scott Lucas, in a smart black ensemble, was there; as were Mrs. James Slattery, wearing a black hat and frock with a mink coat; Mrs. John J. Dempsey, arriving with Mrs. Mike Monroney; Mrs. J. A. G. Pennington, with her pretty debutante daughter, Miss Virginia Pennington; Mrs. Henry Grady, whose black suit was set off with a matching hat, trimmed in pink wings; Mrs. Frank Waring, and Mrs. Justin Miller, who has just served her turn at selling tickets for the President's Birthday Ball.

Envoys' Wives Are Present

Still others I saw in the throng were Mme. Rajamaitri, wife of the Minister of Thailand; Mrs. Robert Brennan, wife of the Irish Minister, who was among those coming early; Mme. Loudon, wife of the Minister of the Netherlands; Mrs. Irene Caldwell, who is working day and night for the success of the President's Birthday events, despite the fact that she is suffering from a touch of influenza.

To mention still others there—I saw Mr. and Mrs. Randolph Blinn, the latter of whom is also widely known as Ethel Hueston, the novelist; Mrs. Phil Ferguson, Mrs. Robert Love Taylor, Miss Minnie Mae Fleming, Mrs. William B. Shearer, Mrs. Mary Mallon, Mrs. Frank H. Buck, Dr. and Mrs. Nelson Darton, George L. Williams, whom some fair lady had persuaded to escort her upstairs from the cocktail lounge for a few minutes; the Rev. Meade Bolton MacBryde, Mrs. George Murphy, Mrs. Thomas F. Ford and several hundred others.

Still others there were Mrs. Archibald McLachlan, Mrs. Frank Morrison, Mrs. Tilman Bacon Parks, Mrs. Frank Shortall, Mrs. Charles Schneider, Mrs. Chester Swope, Mrs. Wintemute W. Sloan, Mrs. Roland Whitehurst, Mrs. John Walker, and Mrs. Shields.

Mrs. Morgenthau Adds to Fame for Table Decorations

Mrs. Henry Morgenthau, jr., wife of the Secretary of the Treasury, spends lots of time and thought on planning unusual decorations for her parties. Guests at her luncheon yesterday in honor of Mrs. Roosevelt found in the center of the long table a large, irridescent gold fish bowl placed on a mirror, and ten smaller bowls, each containing fish, around the table. Two standards of old glass filled with mimosa and yellow roses completed the decorations. The party was small and informal.

Last year at her luncheon for the First Lady Mrs. Morgenthau dressed little dolls in the costumes of former Presidents and placed them on the table. Each guest presented hers to Mrs. Roosevelt with a verse.

Gathering of Republicans Here Feb. 16 Expected to Stir Up Some Excitement

THE GATHERING of the Republican clan in Washington on February 16 will bring to town several hundred victory minded men and women from cities all over the United States, from New York to Blue Earth, Minn.

The elegantly decorated offices of the National Committee on Jackson place, where an elephant peers at the visitor from virtually every desk, are alive with activity and optimism. Plans are being laid carefully for a round of parties for the delegates, who will come here to set the date and place for next summer's convention.

Invitations for one important party have already been sent out. Mrs. Katharine Kennedy Brown, of Ohio, will give a large reception February 15 at the Mayflower in honor of Senator and Mrs. Robert Taft of her home State. An active party worker since 1920, Mrs. Brown was also founder and president of the Dayton Junior League.

FORMER SCHOOL TEACHERS, lawyers, directors of corporations and social notables are among the national committee women who will attend the February convention. Assured of a warm welcome from both Republican and Democrats in Washington is chic, attractive Mrs. Ruth Baker Pratt, who will attend the gathering as national committeewoman from New York. Musically minded, Mrs. Pratt—She is on the directors' board of the New York Philharmonic—was a leading figure in political-social circles here when she represented her district in Congress about ten years ago. Mrs. Pratt was at one time a member of the board of aldermen in New York and is now a trustee of Wellesley College, where she studied.

Another delegate of interest to social as well as official Washington is Mrs. Paul FitzSimmons from Rhode Island. Besides being national committeewoman from her State, she is the mother of 38-year-old Gov. William H. Vanderbilt. Her hobbies are farming and collecting old prints and antiques. Mrs. FitzSimmons paid Washington a visit earlier in the winter, when she put up at the Sulgrave Club.

MISS CONSUELO NORTHROP, of Vermont, another delegate, is a lawyer—the first, incidentally, ever to try a murder case in her State. She owns and operates a farm near the international border and likes to collect samples of Vermont arts and crafts.

The first woman ever to hold the office of treasurer in her home State, Indiana, is Mrs. Grace B. Reynolds, of Cambridge City. A school teacher before her marriage, she served as State treasurer for two terms. Mrs. Jacob Bower, National Committeewoman from Illinois, is a graduate lawyer and after the death of her husband was named vice president and director of a leading business firm. One of her daughters is married to a member of the British Parliament.

Miss Martha McClure, of Iowa, who usually stays with Mrs. Mae Hamilton here, has attended every national convention for years and was a former member of the State library commission. Mrs. Cara L. Ebert, of West Virginia, is in the insurance business. A hard and able political worker is Mrs. Worthington Scranton, of Scranton, Pa., vice chairman of the national committee. Her organization in Lackawanna County is among the strongest in the country.

ONE OF THE ABLEST women representatives at the convention will be Miss Marion Martin, assistant chairman and director of women's activities for the national committee. Miss Martin has left her desk in Jackson place temporarily for a speaking trip. Last year she made 49 speeches in as many days. A member of the Maine Legislature for four years, she was studying law at Yale when the call of the G. O. P. came, and hopes someday to resume her course. On her desk, rather surprisingly, is a little Democratic donkey, but this is not a sign of disloyalty. Near it stands an elephant, and both are made of a magnetic material, so that if you put them face to face, they rush headlong at each other. Miss Martin found them in her Christmas stocking.

WITH CAPITAL CHATTER already beginning to center about the two conventions next summer, and society here now in the post-holiday doldrums, the coming meeting of the men and women leaders of the Republican Party should furnish some welcome.

Czech Minister At Benefit Concert

The Czecho-Slovak Minister and Mme. Hurban went to New York to attend the concert of the New York Philharmonic Orchestra last night at Carnegie Hall. The event was a benefit performance for Czecho-Slovakia.

Walter Damrosch conducted one number, the others being directed by Herman Adler, a refugee. Assisting artis was Germaine Leroux, who is the wife of a former secretary of the Czecho-Slovak legation in Paris, and who is scheduled to perform at a White House musicale next month.

The Minister and Mme. Hurban are expected to return to Washington this week-end.

Wearing Blue, Miss Mantz Is Wed to J. B. Fox

Rev. Joseph Moran Officiates at St. Thomas' Church

Wearing powder-blue crepe instead of the traditional white, and seetting off her ensemble with a corsage of orchids, Miss A. Louise Mantz, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William E. Mantz, was married at 9 o'clock yesterday morning to James B. Fox, son of Mr. and Mrs. Albert W. Fox.

The ceremony took place at St. Thomas' Church, the Rev. Joseph Moran officiating. Miss Isabelle Fox, sister of the bridegroom, served as maid of honor, wearing a wood rose frock with matching hat and a corsage of gardenias. Thomas Godey was best man.

A breakfast at the home of the bride's uncle and aunt, Mr. and Mrs. P. G. Herbert, followed the ceremony. After a honeymoon in the South the couple will return to Washington where Mr. Fox is studying for the foreign service.

Mrs. Fox attended Holton Arms School, while the bridegroom studied in Switzerland and was graduated later from National Law School. His mother, the former Miss Marjorie Wimsatt, is a member of a prominent old Washington family.

Holcombs Fete Minister Close

This evening Gen. and Mrs. Holcomb will again entertain at dinner in honor of the Minister of the Dominican Republic, Andrew Pastoriza, and Senora de Pastoriza.

League Protests Seal Plan Changes by House

Voteless Women Declare in Favor Of Present Health Department Setup In Appeal to Committee for District

By Jessie Ash Arndt

The Post Club Editor.

The Voteless D. C. League of Women Voters has registered with the House District Committee and the District Commissioners objections to certain proposed changes in the Seal plan for reorganization of the District government which have been made public since the hearings before the District Commissioners. The league lists proposals that it "cannot consider as improvements" and declared they are "not in accord with the expressed desires of the majority of those who testified at the public hearings."

"The suggested advisory council of nine members to be appointed by the Commissioners," says the league, "does not grant the request of the citizens for a voice in their government through either local suffrage or representation in Congress.

"Furthermore, we think that experience has shown that high type volunteer boards, or boards of adequate paid experts render better public service than would a board of persons who might be attracted by the small compensation that is proposed.

Present Health Setup Favored

In the matter of the proposal to select the District of Columbia health officer from the Public Health Service, the executive board of the District League of Women Voters makes these points:

"The Health Department of the District under the present arrangement is functioning with efficiency and success. The board is at a loss to understand what would be gained by the proposed change.

"The proposed restriction of the selection of the District health officer to the Public Health Service or to any other single group is contrary to the personnel policy of the best man obtainable for the position as advocated repeatedly by the League of Women Voters.

"The appointment of the District health officer by the President from the Public Health Service would increase still further Federal control over District affairs. The testimony by District citizens on the subject of reorganization has indicated universal desire for more, rather than less, control by the citizens over their city government.

"The Department of Weights, Measures and Marketing has a fine record of public service. Many of its functions and duties are technical and not of a police nature. We favor its continuation and oppose shifting it to the Police Department."

Study Began Last Autumn

The Department of Government and Its Operation, under the chairmanship of Mrs. Joseph Low, is continuing the study it began last autumn of all of the proposals for reorganization of the District Government, giving special attention now to the details of the Griffenhagen plan. It has indorsed several principles, among them the council and city manager form of government. It is also working out suggestions for reorganization, taken from sections to approve in the various plans, and is prepared to approve or oppose anything which comes up.

Representatives of the department attend all hearings of the Commissioners and meetings of the House District Committee.

The objections just submitted to these bodies have the unanimous approval of the board of the league.

Mrs. W. R. Chapline Entertains Pen Women With Movies

'From Fair to Fair and Home Again' Gives League Members a Glimpse Of Many Points of Interest in U. S.

"From Fair to Fair and Home Again" was the title of a 45-minute program of colored motion pictures presented yesterday afternoon at the fellowship tea of the League of American Pen Women by Mrs. W. Ridgely Chapline.

About 75 attended and many remained for the dinner given by the league honoring Mrs. Bess Heath Olmstead, former president of the District branch, who is here from New Jersey visiting Mrs. James T. Watson, president.

Picture-taking is a hobby that Mrs. Chapline and her husband have developed to an art and by which they have shared with their friends the beauties of their trips in this country and abroad. The pictures they made at the coronation in England were so fine they were invited to present them at a special showing in New York.

Photos of Indians Made on Reservations

Yesterday, the "Fair to Fair" journey began with views of the White House, Mount Vernon and the Union Station as the travelers left Washington. They crossed on the ferry to the fairgrounds, approaching the N w York Fair from Long Island Sound. After seeing the sights, they started out again from Washington, stopping en route to the West Coast at various points of interest. Among other views the film included was one of Lincoln's first courthouse at Decatur, Ill. Crossing the Mississippi River at Quincy; scenes in Colorado, northern Arizona, the Grand Canyon, and Indians on the desert, taken before the edict of Secretary Ickes that no pictures of the Indians should be taken without tribal consent.

Among the most beautiful pictures Mrs. Chapline showed were those of Alpine flowers, taken in the mountains of central Utah, where she and her family spent three weeks at an altitude of from 8,800 to 10,000 feet. There the desert paint brush, commonly known as a brilliant orange color, is either cream or rose color and grows among the blue lupine. There is also snow-white columbine with large, delicate blossoms, more beautiful than orchids.

Caught in Rains On Crossing Desert

There were scenes in Nevada, at Lake Tahoe, then of the San Francisco Fair. On the return, they went by way of San Diego and to Tuscon, being caught in unprecedented downpours as they crossed the desert. Instead of glaring sun and burning desert sands, they had water underwheel and rare cloud effects overhead.

Returning through Missouri, they stopped to get pictures in the Shepherd of the Hills country and, near Van Buren, Mo., in the Ozark Mountains, scenes at Big Spring, which is next to the largest in the United States. They came through the bluegrass region of Kentucky, the apple orchards of the Shenandoah Valley and home, completing a three-month trip.

Mrs. Frank B. Steele was chairman of hospitality for the tea, assisted by Mrs. William W. Badgely, Miss Clara Mandeschied, Mrs. Harriet Chambers, Mme. Felich Garzia, Mrs. Theodore Tiller, and Mrs. Alida Scott.

Mrs. Henry to Talk Before Md. Women

Mrs. Paul Henry of Seattle, assistant in the women's division of the Republican National Committee, will be the guest speaker at the luncheon of the Maryland Federation of Republican Women's Clubs Monday, January 29, in the Hotel Southern, Baltimore.

Mrs. Henry's talk will be her first in the East since her appointment in December by Miss Marion E. Martin, director of the women's division, with whom she is associated in rallying women voters for the 1940 campaign. Through family ties, educational associations, study and activities, Mrs. Henry combines Eastern and Western interests in the political field. Although she has lived in the Northwest for 30 years, she was born in north central Pennsylvania, and received her education in schools in Washington and New York City.

Mrs. Willson to Give Report on Health

The work of the Mothers' Health Association of the District for the last year and plans for the future will be reported by Mrs. Prentiss Willson, president, at the annual meeting of the Birth Control Federation of America in session in New York City through Friday, Mrs. Montgomery Blair, jr., has announced.

In addition to giving a report at yesterday's session on State leagues, Mrs. Willson will lead the discussion on "How to Establish Relationship With Public and Private Agencies" this morning. At this session presidents of the birth control organizations in New Jersey, Kentucky and Delaware will join Mrs. Willson in the consideration of this problem.

Mrs. Blair has announced that a campaign for funds is now in progress. A budget of $6,000 is planned to enlarge the service of the clinic and make medically supervised contraceptive information available to the thousands of needy mothers in the District.

Soroptimists Hear Talk by Miss Lindsay

Working Women Must Learn to Get Along With Others, She Says

Amusing observations on women in business, in their homes and in club work were presented by Miss Malvina Lindsay, woman's page editor of The Washington Post and author of "The Gentler Sex," in a talk yesterday before the Soroptimist Club. She spoke at its weekly luncheon meeting at the Willard Hotel.

Women are good sports when they see themselves satirized in "The Gentler Sex," said Miss Lindsay. They are the first to admit that some of the things they do are funny and have the saving sense of humor that enables them to enjoy a column revealing little idiosyncracies like those they possess.

Analyzing in a more serious vein the situation of the older business woman, she asserted that the mature woman, with her ability and experience, should be an asset in business and would be if she cultivated those qualities that made it possible for her to get along pleasantly with other people.

At the close of her talk, she entertained the club with the reading of two of her columns.

She was introduced by Mrs. Elinor Lee, program chairman. Miss Mary Bourke presided at the meeting and Mrs. Jewell Downs presented as soloist Mrs. Bertha Henderson, soprano, who sang while the luncheon was in progress.

Miss Margaret Hickey, owner and director of the Hickey School for Secretaries in St. Louis and a member of the Soroptimist Club there, was a guest at the head table. Miss Hickey, who is international relations chairman for the Missouri Federation of Business Women's Clubs, is here attending the conference on the Cause and Cure of War.

great, barred door that separated me from the world outside. The two men entered.

"Young man," the sergeant said, "this is Professor Von Gearsworthy. He's going to talk to you."

I recognized the name at once. Professor Wilhelm Von Gearsworthy, the eminent psychiatrist . . . who hadn't heard of him?

Humbly I invited my distinguished guest to be seated beside me on the cot. He acquiesced. The sergeant closed the door and went away.

"Now, my boy," said the professor, in a kindly voice, "suppose you tell me the whole story of what brought you here."

I didn't hesitate. Here, I felt, was a man intelligent enough to understand the trials I had gone through.

He sat there, thoughtfully fingering his close-cropped gray mustache, as I began my story. Carefully, I led him through my experiences, sparing none of the harrowing details.

As I talked, a strange excitement came into the professor's eyes, and a flush of agitation suffused his cheeks. By the time I had taken him across the intersection of Thirteenth and the Avenue, where mystifying "Walk" lights still flash their confusing signs, and on out to Dupont Circle, where to this day traffic swirls in unregimented waves, the good Professor was on his feet, pacing angrily back and forth from one end to the other of the cell.

Thinking I might be upsetting him, I paused briefly and looked up at him.

"Go on, go on," he shouted, without slackening his pace. "I want to hear you out."

So once more I plunged into my story, this time to describe in all its horror my visit to the inspection station. After that, I touched lightly on my experience of yesterday in the green pasture, and I was done.

But not so the Professor. By now he was literally flying up and down the cell, and the color in his cheeks had mounted to an apoplectic red.

Who's Crazy Now

"So they thought you were crazy!" he finally flung out. He turned and fixed me with a maniacal eye, and for a moment I was frightened of the man. "So they thought you were crazy," he repeated. "Well, let me tell you something. The things a man has to endure in this town are enough to drive him crazy. I've had to cross the street against those stupid lights. I've had to battle through that labyrinth that's known as Dupont Circle. And, yes, I've been through an auto inspection station. And I don't mind telling you that there have been times when it almost had me crazy, though I never saw a laughing horse."

He paused, exhausted, and sank down beside me on the cot.

When he regained his breath, he spoke again.

"Just one more thing," he said. "You were looking for an interview. Well, now you've got it. I've lived in this town for years and in the old days I was a voter. And why we still don't vote is more than I can understand. We certainly ought to have a vote so that we could do something about these darn-fool regulations that drive a man insane."

I was overcome. Too much had happened to me all at once. Weakly I turned to my new-found friend and took his hand.

"Thank you, Professor," I said, "from the bottom of my heart."

The learned man arose and took me by the arm.

"Nonsense, my son," he said. "You owe me no thanks."

For a moment we stood there, each overcome with strong emotion. Then, arm in arm, we walked out of the cell and along the corridor to freedom . . .

I ask no plaudits. I seek no compliments upon my success in carrying through a difficult assignment. Because I have that inner satisfaction that comes from knowing it has been a job well done.

To provide a trained staff of traffic experts to aid in the accident prevention battle, Brown named Capt. Smith and Lieut. Beverly Beach to attend the Northwestern University course. They are expected to leave February 11. Capt. Arthur Miller, former commander of the Third Precinct, is already at the university taking a year's course.

It is understood that Miller, Smith and Beach will take over the department's traffic-control activities upon completion of their specialized training.

Maj. Brown also said he hopes to secure additional personnel and equipment to put experienced accident investigators on the streets.

Lords Rebuke Unity's Critics As Ungenerous

'Hostile Association' Cited in Seeking Guard For Friend of Hitler

By the Associated Press

London, Jan. 24.—Members of the House of Lords spoke up tonight to rebuke public critics of blond Unity Freeman-Mitford, Adolf Hitler's friend, after a Labor member of Commons had served notice he would ask that she be placed under guard because of "her recent hostile associations."

Miss Freeman-Mitford, daughter of Lord Redesdale, was sent home by Hitler early this month. She is now reported to be in a nursing home, preparatory to an operation to remove a bullet from her neck. The wound, London newspapers have said, was inflicted in Munich last August.

A newsreel commentary about her spectacular return to England on January 3 was singled out by Lord Denman for noble disdain.

"I can understand how the activities of Miss Freeman-Mitford caused annoyance and exasperation to many people in this country but, considering the unhappy plight in which she returned, to pour ridicule as was done in the commentary was unfair and ungenerous."

The Marquess of Dufferin and Ava, for the government, agreed that the Freeman-Mitford film was "an example of sadistic brutality," but said he did not feel that such a "lapse" by one film company called for governmental action.

Lord Denman withdrew a motion he had offered for "careful censorship of news films in wartime."

For the Labor peers, Lord Strabolgi said the ministry of information was keeping the press so short of news that "unfortunate journalists" grasped at any story they could write.

Jean and Willis, a pair of sharp young steppers, are giving the elegant Manno and Strafford some nifty competition . . . Bill Strickland is leading his Dixieland Band in a cavalcade of the hit tunes of the last 12 years . . . Here's wishing Bill and his boys will all be on hand for Lotus' twentieth anniversary.

"G. W. T. W." CONSCIOUS. Shar-Zad's Bill McCune and his orchestra will attend the "Gone With the Wind" opening in a body. They won't say whether they've read the book, but the "G. W. T. W." build-up has gotten them all "het up" over Dixie and that War Between the States. Washington is the farthest South that most of them have ever been.

FLORA LEA—GINGER ROGERS. There's something puzzlingly familiar about Flora Lea, now dancing so prettily with Richard Stuart in the Shoreham Blue Room . . . It's her figure which happens to be a duplicate of Ginger Rogers' . . . Flora modeled all the dresses designed by Irene Castle for Ginger to wear in "The Story of Vernon and Irene Castle."

TONY RYAN who pianos so beautifully in the Del Rio cocktail lounge, is one of the town's most unique and lovable personalities . . . Tony's completely blind but happier in his music and friendships than nine-tenth of us who have no such tremendous handicap. He's a lesson in keeping your chin up and carrying through.

GIRLS' CIRCUS. The "Dance Cocktails" at Bamboo Gardens all act as though they'd just jumped out of Ringling's circus. Such tumbling! Such stunts! And topsy-turvy little Ray Dooley sets the show on its head by literally dancing upside-down. Other clever acts, too . . . Bamboo's Singer Marian Down is currently receiving compliments on her showing in WJSV's new Sunday program, "Song Styles of America."

IF HOLLYWOOD should need expert advice on luxury restaurant service, it would do well to call on maitre d'hotel Arthur Marchisio who holds forth in Raleigh's Pall Mall Room . . . The finesse and polish of the Pall Mall service makes you think you're in the middle of a novel about the life of the upper crust.

Power Rate Adjustment Likely Today

Building Owners And Union Disagree On Allocation of Proposed Slash

Dispute between spokesmen of building owners and a labor union over division of a proposed cut in this year's electric rates developed yesterday when the Public Utilities Commission held a hearing on the annual adjustment of rates which is expected today.

Sidney R. Katz, secretary-treasurer of the Maryland and District Industrial Union Council, demanded a "greater allocation" of the proposed cut to residential consumers. Rufus S. Lusk, secretary of the Building Owners and Managers Association of the District, sent in a statement calling for allocation of the entire proposed rate reduction to commercial users of current, because thousands of domestic users are paying less than it costs to give them service.

Prospects are that the reduction in consumer rates would be between $454,766 and $575,029. The smaller figure was presented by A. G. Neal, president of the Potomac Electric Power Co., who said profits of the company last year were sufficient to warrant such a rate reduction.

George H. Wilson, chief accountant of the P. U. C., said the profits of the company last year were sufficient to warrant a rate reduction of $575,029.44. The discrepancy developed over methods of handling various miscellaneous items of property, formerly charged to operating expense, but in the last year handled through the depreciation reserve item, accounting.

The reduction of rates is based on the sliding scale arrangement whereby part of all profit in excess of a basic rate of return of 6 per cent is allocated for reductions.

William McK. Clayton, chairman of the utilities committee of the Federation of Citizens Associations, again appeared at the hearing to request a "real" valuation of the company's properties. He called the valuation made in 1924 "fictitious" and declared that each succeeding valuation was based on the 1924 figure.

In the event the commission approves of the $454,766 figure, it would ask the company to draw up a new schedule of rates including the reduction. Chairman Riley E. Elgen, of the commission, has asked the company officials to submit further reports on the manner in which the new accounting system used last year affected the amount available for rate reductions. This report is due today.

Last year a cut of $394,085 in the electric bills was ordered by the commission. Of this amount, $141,500 was allocated to reductions in the residential schedules and the larger portion to commercial users of current.

Storm Finds Police Crippled By Flu and Grip

The Metropolitan police force braved the winter's worst snow yesterday handicapped by the loss of many of its members.

Fully 150 policemen were ill. Most of them were suffering attacks of flu or grip.

In one precinct normally staffed by 61 men, 17 were sick. In some other precincts at least 10 were home abed.

Clinics for police and firemen throughout the city were jammed, services in some places being crippled because police doctors were sick.

Arkansas Avenue Association Meets

Application for membership in the Federation of Citizens Associations has been made for the new Arkansas Avenue Community Association. Twenty-three new members were received last night at the organization's meeting.

A suggestion of H. E. Warner, principal of Hine Junior High School, that the association cooperate with Howard P. Safford, principal of Macfarland School, in seeking traffic lights, was approved.

Capital News In Brief

Snowballers Fined

Five boys, 15 to 19, last night paid $5 each at Fourth Precinct station for the privilege of heaving a few snowballs in the presence of Sergt. Roy Ostrom. When he spied the battle in progress, Sergt. Ostrom warned the belligerents and strolled off. Turning back, he observed that hostilities had been resumed, called the wagon and enforced sanctions.

Joyride in Hearse

John Robert Nesbitt, colored, 44, was assessed 90 days yesterday in Police Court as the aftermath of a ride he started Monday night in a hearse and ended a few seconds later practically in the owner's funeral parlor. Judge Edward M. Curran imposed the 90 days for driving without a permit and held Nesbitt for the grand jury on a charge of larceny of the hearse.

Overcoats Distributed

One hundred overcoats have been distributed among needy veterans in the District, it was announced yesterday by F. F. Gardner, chairman of a committee for the President's Own Garrison, Army and Navy Union. The winter garments were acquired through an appeal published in The Post.

Takes $25 Award in Competition For Beginners; E. A. Pritchard Is Second and R. K. Geram Third

His speech on "Socialized Medicine" in a contest for students in the beginning public speaking classes won him this distinction and a first prize of $25.

Runner-up in the oratorical competition was E. A. Pritchard, whose address on "Inside Russia" won him $15, the second prize. Third prize of $10 went to R. K. Geran, who talked on "That Other Third." Five other students, selected by classmen in the several public speaking groups, participated in the event which took place in the Hall of Government on the campus.

Harry C. Davis, secretary of the university board of trustees, who established the contest as an annual event four years ago, announced the winners. Prof. Douglas Bement, of the department of English, presided.

Engineers Fear License Bill May Cost Jobs

'Self-Made' Men Make Appeal to Committee; Hearing Is Deferred

Fears that a bill designed to regulate the engineering profession in Washington would force many young engineers without college education out of their jobs were expressed yesterday by engineers who sought to testify on the legislation.

A hearing scheduled before the Judiciary subcommittee of the House District Committee was postponed until 10:30 a. m. today.

The engineers told the committee that the measure, which has passed the Senate, would discriminate against "self-made" engineers.

They pointed out that licenses, under the bill, would be issued only to three classes of applicants:

(1) Those who have graduated from an accredited college and have a record of four years of active practice.

(2) Engineers who pass an examination "designed to show knowledge and skill approximating that attained through graduation from an accredited four-year engineering curriculum" plus eight years of active practice.

(3) Applicants who have had at least 12 years' practice in engineering work and are not less than 35 years of age.

The legislation seeks to set up a board to regulate and license professional engineers in the District.

Chairman McGehee of the Judiciary subcommittee said that today's hearing would take up the Commissioners' amendments to the unemployment compensation act before the engineering bill.

Gallery Chief Says New Art Is on the Way

Finley Addresses 150 At Dinner of the Washington Society

Expectation of more important gifts for America's newest art museum was intimated by David E. Finley, director of the National Gallery of Art, last night as he addressed dinner guests honoring the oldest art organization in the country, the National Academy of Design.

"We have been greatly encouraged by the gifts of Mr. Kress (Samuel H. Kress who recently gave the Gallery several prized art pieces)," said Finley, "and by other things that are coming."

One hundred and fifty persons attended the dinner given in the Mayflower by the Washington Society of Fine Arts. Among the guests was Miss Leila Livingston Morse, granddaughter of Samuel F. B. Morse, inventor of the telegraph, who founded the National Academy of Design in 1825.

Hobart Nichols, of Bronxville, N. Y., president of the Academy, said: "Washington at last is coming into its own as an art center," Nichols declared.

'Wind' Ticket Sales Help Raise Million

Proceeds from sale of tickets to the benefit performance of "Gone With the Wind," to be given at Loew's Palace Theater Saturday, helped bring the national campaign for the Finnish Relief Fund past the million dollar mark, it was announced last night.

Over 1,800 tickets to the benefit showing have been sold in Washington, said Milton M. Brown, executive secretary of the local unit of the fund. Approximately 500 tickets remain.

Policeman Will Be Tried By 3 Civilians

Sergeant Baker Accused of Untruths And Using Property Without Permission

Detective Sergt. John K. Baker, lone police officer to be accused after a two-month investigation of the District Police Department by the Department of Justice, will stand trial before a special civilian trial board at 10 a. m. tomorrow.

Baker, who is still on active duty, is accused of "conduct prejudicial to the reputation, good order and discipline of the force," and making an untruthful statement before officials.

The first count, bearing two specifications, charges that the detective failed to turn in property, and that he used property without permission. The second alleges that he made untruthful statements to G-men while being questioned.

Baker is represented by Attorney James A. O'Shea. Assistant Corporation Counsel Oliver Gasch will handle the prosecution.

Three District officials—Jo V. Morgan, sole member of the Board of Tax Appeals; Capt. H. C. Whitehurst, director of highways, and Patrick H. Tansey, Assistant Engineer Commissioner — have been named by Commissioner Hazen to hear charges lodged by Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police.

Charges were placed against Baker, a pickup squad investigator, after Brown received a report from J. Edgar Hoover, director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, last spring. Hoover's information was gathered by G-men during an investigation which involved more than 50 local policemen. Baker was the only one accused.

The three-man civilian board is a departure from the usual procedure of having at least one police official, either a captain or an inspector, sitting.

Corporation Counsel Seal recommended to the Commissioners that Baker be tried by three men not connected with either the Police Department or the corporation counsel's office.

Maj. Brown said he did not know of the special board until he was notified by Commissioner Hazen. He explained that several inspectors were unavailable but that he had chosen Inspector James F. Beckett to sit. Under the present setup, Beckett will act as an alternate.

Several high police officials, including Inspector Bernard W. Thompson, chief of detectives; his assistant, Capt. Ira E. Keck, and Lieut. Joseph W. Shimon, chief of the pickup squad, have been summoned as witnesses.

Marshall Asks New Quarters for Job Benefit Board

A recommendation for new quarters and special legislation to simplify administration of the District Unemployment Compensation Board is embodied in the fourth annual report made public yesterday by John A. Marshall, executive officer of the board.

Marshall, in his report to the Commissioners, said the present main offices at 470 Indiana avenue northwest are "extremely old, in bad condition, and present dangerous fire hazards." Other divisions are in separated sections "with resultant loss of time to both the public and the personnel."

The recommended legislation, which has already been acted upon by the Commissioners includes an amendment tot he present act to reduce the employer contribution from the present 3 per cent of the pay roll to 2.7 per cent.

In 1939 the board collected $6,763,150 and paid out in benefits $1,436,893. The balance in the Treasury as of December 31, 1939, was $16,091,879.31.

Federal Security Administrator Paul V. McNutt last night threw a soft punch at John L. Lewis to complete the first major exchange of political courtesies for 1940.

The C. I. O. chief, in a speech in Columbus Tuesday, called McNutt a "political adventurer" who has tried "to buy enough votes to make him President of the United States."

McNutt last night told 80 members of the National Automobile Dealers Association:

"I feel a strong bond with the automobile industry because three years ago a certain individual tried to sit down on it and yesterday he tried to sit down on me. Your experience, makes mine less embarrassing."

Industry Relation Studied

McNutt offered a charter for business-Government relationships in his prepared address, which was carried on a coast-to-coast radio network.

The Federal activity to which retail distributors should be most "keenly sensitive," he declared, is the endeavor "to prevent the fettering of business by monopoly."

"Should entrenched financial power succeed in monopolizing the industrial output and distribution in this country," he warned, "America will already be well along the road toward some form of totalitarian government."

A governmental oligarchy might then seize control of the financial structure, bringing America "something approaching communism," he said, or business might take over Government and "we should have fascism."

The security administrator hailed as a significant forward step a general recognition of collective bargaining by labor, "properly regulated and protected, as an integral part of our industrial economy."

An adequate social security structure improves the morale of every citizen, he said, and "insures a minimum of consumption power which will go far toward keeping our economy on an even keel."

McNutt praised the automobile industry for "a magnificent achievement in democracy" in supplying the United States with 30,000,000 of the world's 43,000,000 automobiles, while maintaining a "good" wage record and creating profits "in abundance."

He said there must be no slackening in the fight for recovery "because the domestic battle is too long in yielding complete victory."

Stanley Horner, of Washington, presided at the banquet in the Mayflower Hotel. Entertainment was furnished by a group of N. B. C. artists, including Miss Lynn Allison, Gene Archer and the Congressionals, directed by Morgan Baer.

New Type of Engineering Seen By Marvin as Dean Is Honored

Development of a new type of engineering education was foreseen by President Cloyd H. Marvin of George Washington University in an address last night before almuni, facutly men, students and representative engineers honoring Frederick M. Feiker, new dean of the university's engineerings school.

Dr. Marvin said a school of engineering located in the Capital has special duties to perform.

"We must train men for service at the point where engineering reaches out to serve mankind, touching problems of public health, law and governmental-industrial relations," said the college president. "For such a development a man is needed who knows engineering and government and who has an imagination and courage, and in Dean Feiker we have that man."

The new dean heard pledges of cooperation from representatives of the alumni, the engineering faculty, the student body, the board of trustees and the engineering profession in Washington.

Speakers were Watson Davis, director of science service, who spoke for the engineering alumni; Bert Randall, president of the engineering council, for the students; Dean Henry Grattan Doyle, for the faculty; A. B. MacDaniel, president of the Washington Council of Engineers, for the engineering profession; Prof. Norman B. Ames, for the engineering school, and Dr. Charles R. Mann, of the board of trustees.

Smith Flays 'Isms' in Talk At Banquet

South Carolina Senator Addresses Central Business Association

The importance of the meaning of the Bill of Rights was emphasized last night by Senator Ellison D. Smith (Democrat), of South Carolina, at the ninth annual banquet of the Central Business Association at the Annapolis Hotel. Nearly 300 attended.

Flaying "all those 'isms' and fool crackpot experiments we have in Government today," the Senator declared, "we're in a more dangerous position in this country today than ever before in our history."

"I'll pass on before the younger men and women of today—as is perfectly natural," said the Senator. "But elections today testify that we don't know what the Constitution really is." Only through individual study of the powers of the Constitution and the rights of the people embodied in the Bill of Rights can Americans learn "the blessings of freedom," he said.

Guests at the dinner included Representative Jennings Randolph, of West Virginia; Arch McDonald, radio commentator; Louis Bowdler, president of the Federation of Business Men's Associations; Harry N. Stull, president of the Federation of Citizens Associations; Wilbur S. Finch, president of the District Suffrage Association.

Entertainment and the presentation of door prizes from numerous business firms feature the evening. William J. Mileham, president of the association, was toastmaster.

Armstrong Beats Montanez on Technical K. O.

The Washington Post Sports

16 WASHINGTON: THURSDAY, JANUARY 25, 1940 X*

Referee Halts Bruising Bout In 9th Round

Challenger Floored 3 Times, Saved by Bell in 8th After Courageous Stand

By Jack Cuddy.

United Press Staff Writer.

New York, Jan. 24.—Welterweight Champion Henry Armstrong pounded out a thunderous denial tonight to rumors that he was "washed up" by scoring a technical knockout over blood-smeared Challenger Pedro Montanez in the ninth round, after flooring the Puerto Rican three times.

More than 17,000 electrified fans in Madison Square Garden saw the bull-shouldered little Los Angeles Negro pound hard-punching Pedro into such helplessness that Referee Billy Cavanaugh halted the butchery after 47 seconds of the ninth round.

By his splendid performance in the jammed Garden tonight, Armstrong made many experts eat their opinions. He gave one of the most impressive battles of his long career in defending the 147-pound crown successfully for the fifteenth time, seeming to be more persistent, more ruthless and accurate with his punches than ever before.

Hurricane Hank spotted the Puerto Rican body-puncher 4¾ pounds and weathered a smashing body attack in the early going to render his opponent virtually helpless when Cavanaugh mercifully stepped in.

Foe Had Courage

In Armstrong's 113th professional fight he stepped into the Garden ring at the age of 27 against a younger opponent whom many had branded as a "geezer"—a man afraid when the going got rough. But Armstrong found no "geezer" in hard-hitting Pedro tonight.

From the opening gong on, Pedro tried to stand head to head and shoulder to shoulder with the champion — tried to work on Henry's lower lip with short right uppercuts in the first couple of sessions and then lowered his rib-breaking fire to the body as the battle wore on.

Armstrong's amazing left hook—a blow that kept whistling from nowhere throughout the battle, brought about the bloody ruin of Montanez, a game ringster who was desperately making his second try for a world title. Pedro was a better fighter tonight than when he lost in his challenge attempt against Lightweight Champion Lou Ambers in 1937. He was a tough man to beat.

Although Armstrong won every round but the second, which was even, this scoring does not reflect the true menace that the Puerto Rican provided in the first three rounds, at least.

Henry's Face Red

In the second session, for example, Pedro's steaming hooks reddened Henry's face and puffed the champion's left eye so badly that he could scarcely see from that optic during the remainder of the melee.

Henry got to his man in the fourth, flooring him twice in that session and barraging the swaying challenger with such blows to the head that it seemed he no longer could remain conscious. But Pedro stood there trying to protect himself, with a mantle of blood covering the right side of his face, until the round ended.

Blow-by-Blow As Armstrong Retains Title

By the United Press

Blow-by-blow description follows:

ROUND ONE—They met in the middle of the ring and Montanez hooked lightly to the body. Armstrong threw a light right to the head and followed it up with a left and a right to the body. Armstrong put right lefts and rights to the head, but Montanez bored in and they fought with their shoulders leaning against each other. Armstrong landed a hard series of lefts and rights to the head and drove Montanez back against the ropes. Montanez fired away at Armstrong's body but Henry came back with short lefts and rights to the head. Armstrong kept Montanez on the ropes and they were punching hard for the body at the bell. It was Armstrong's round by a slight margin.

ROUND TWO—Armstrong got across a right to the head but Montanez bored in and landed a left and a right to the head. The right brought a puff to Armstrong's left eye. They put their heads down in the middle of the ring and traded body punches and then Montanez connected with a short uppercut. Armstrong bulled Montanez to the ropes and landed a hard left to the head and followed it up with a hard right to the head. Montanez landed two stiff rights to the body and then missed with a long right uppercut. Armstrong bore in hammering punches to the body and Montanez threw a stiff right to the body. Armstrong landed a left hook to the head and caught a hard right to the head in return. Montanez went back across the ropes and took a hard left and a hard right to the head. Montanez got across two sharp uppercuts with his right as the round ended. The round was even.

ROUND THREE—Montanez landed a right to the body in midring and Armstrong connected with a sharp left hook to the head. Montanez got across a hard right upper... and forced Armstrong to give ground. Armstrong came back boring in, throwing lefts and rights to the head and Montanez missed with a long looping left. Armstrong landed a right to the body and Montanez slapped across a stiff left to the face. Montanez was bleeding from his right brow. Armstrong swarmed in, throwing lefts and rights to the head, but Montanez put across a stiff right to the head in... Armstrong banged his left to Montanez's face twice and then came through with another stiff left to the same place. Montanez threw a right to the body, but at the end of the round Armstrong was on top of him pumping away with lefts and rights to the head. It was Armstrong's round.

ROUND FOUR—Armstrong caught a left to the body in midring but countered with a hard right to the head. Armstrong missed with a long left hook and caught a hard left to the face in return. Montanez bored in and got across a hard right to the head, following it up with a left to the head. Armstrong bulled Montanez to the ropes with a left and right and then staggered him with a flurry of punches to the head. Montanez was floored by a flurry of lefts and rights, but came back without taking a count. Armstrong ran over to the ropes and went after him with hard lefts and rights to the head. Montanez stood against the ropes an... went down again under a flurry of lefts and rights. Montanez got up at the count of 6, but Armstrong went after him with more lefts and rights. Montanez had his back to the ropes hanging on gamely while Armstrong threw a punishing series of lefts and rights. It was Armstrong's round.

ROUND FIVE—Armstrong came out throwing hooks to the body and Montanez jabbed him back lightly with a left. Armstrong drove Montanez to the ropes but Montanez came off and connected

Boston Seeks Ex-Tiger as Substitute

Second Baseman Will Discuss Terms With Reds Sunday; $40,000 Top Offer

By the Associated Press

Grand Rapids, Mich., Jan. 24.—The Boston Red Sox today jumped into baseball's free-for-all—the battle of dollars for rights to Bennie McCoy, Detroit Tiger infielder who was declared a free agent by Commissioner Kenesaw M. Landis.

McCoy disclosed at his home at suburban Grandville that General Manager Eddie Collins of the Red Sox had telephoned him that he was interested in obtaining him as a substitute for Manager Joe Cronin at shortstop.

Benny did not reveal the amount of money Collins offered him but did say that he was not interested in a substitute's job.

In the mail box today McCoy found a letter from Warren G. Giles, business manager of the Cincinnati Reds, who said that Manager Bill McKechnie would visit Grandville Sunday to discuss a deal.

Landis' decision which freed 91 Tiger chattels does not permit any of the released players to sign contracts until midnight Sunday.

McCoy has admitted that he has received one offer of a $40,000 bonus and a two-year contract at $10,000 a season. This offer was reported to have been made by Connie Mack, of the Philadelphia Athletics.

Brewers Hold Troy Five to One Field Goal

Special Dispatch to The Post

Troy, N. Y., Jan. 24.—In one of the outstanding American Basketball League upsets of recent years, the Washington Heurich Brewers, of Washington, D. C., tonight completely routed the powerful Troy Haymakers in an American Basketball League game before 3,000 spectators here, 23 to 8.

By virtue of their victory, the Brewers forged into a tie with the Philadelphia Sphas for the American League's lead, both teams being credited with 12 victories and but 7 defeats.

While the fans looked on in bewilderment, the Brewers presented a splendid passing attack and an airtight defense that surrendered but two free tosses within the last two periods, Moe Frankel, Troy-Celtic guard, was the only home player to sink a field goal.

Ben Kramer, a former Kingston Colonial player prior to Kingston's merger with Troy, gained sweet revenge over his old mates tonight as he contributed five points to the Heurich attack while holding Chick Reiser, high scoring Troy-Celtic forward, to a lone foul goal.

Jersey Reds Drop From Basketball League

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 24.—Ed Wilde, president of the New York Jewels of the American Pro Basketball League, announced tonight he had purchased the franchise of the Jersey City Reds.

Wilde said he would keep the nucleus of his present team and add four members of the Reds—Ace Goldstein, Moe Spehn, Hagen Anderson and Al Benson.

The league will now have only six members—New York, Wilkes-Barre, Baltimore, Washington, Philadelphia and Troy.

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

POVICH

Judge Landis was a safe port in a violent storm 19 years ago when baseball's club owners gave him their game to administer. The Black Sox scandal had rocked their industry and they were panicky in their search for something or somebody to tether public confidence. So they got the Judge, a symbol of fearless integrity on the Federal bench for 15 years.

But when Landis agreed to superintend the baseball industry, he apparently was not ready to confine his efforts to the protection of the club owners. He recognized the ball players, too, as part of his baseball domain and long ago he determined that the wage-slaves also would get a fair shake.

Thus it is no mere whim of Landis' that the club owners do not have permission to contract Bennie McCoy or any other free agent until 15 days after they are liberated by Landis. It is a measure that Landis has taken for the protection of the players and if they are not deeply grateful then they are base ingrates.

The first offer that McCoy received, for instance, was $25,000. That is an amount to make any $3,500-a-year player's head swim. If there were no restraining order by Landis, he would doubtless accept that first offer, and quickly. But Landis is enabling him to wait. McCoy has 15 days in which to weigh all offers and now one club is reported to be offering him $40,000. He ought to be grateful for that Solomon-like 15-day ruling of the Judge's.

Players Pay Nothing for Protection

There has been other evidence that Landis is on the alert to protect the ballplayer from calculating club owners. One of the rights he reserved for himself when he signed his Commissioner's contract was the authority to adjudicate any salary dispute between player and club owner.

There is no record that any player has yet taken a salary battle to Landis, but that is easily understandable. Rarely is there a great difference in the salary offered a player and the salary he is demanding. Baseball salaries, in fact, are on a higher scale than in any other profession. And the players know they would get short shrift from the Judge in any exorbitant demands.

What do the ball players pay for the protection they get from Landis? Nothing. His entire salary of $65,000 is paid by the two big leagues. Neither do the minors contribute a penny to Landis' salary, despite the fact that his authority extends over them under the agreement signed with the major leagues.

There was some complaint that among the 91 players Landis declared free agents last week were many in the Class D leagues who didn't want to be "freed." It was said that they might find it difficult to get another baseball job, but if that is indeed the case then Landis nevertheless did them a service. They were playing ball for $75 and $100 a month, mind you, and if thy can't make good for a club at that salary, then they are wasting their time in baseball. Landis doubtless thought of that, too.

Stamp to Honor Track Games

Any day now, a new United States stamp issue to honor the recently announced Pan-American track and field games is expected by philatelists. Postmaster General Farley has already authorized a special issue commemorating the fiftieth anniversary of the Pan American Union this year and that the issue will be linked with the games is believed a certainty.

It wouldn't be the first time that he Postoffice Department has seen fit to honor sports thusly. An Olympic stamp was issued when Los Angeles was host to the games in 1932, and although there is a standing rule that no living person is supposed to be pictured on a United States Stamp, the Olympic issue bore a strange resemblance to Charley Paddock in action.

What we know about stamps could be written on the back of one of the things, but we are advised by Chick Kenny, eminent authority on philately, that foreign countries are far ahead of the United States in stamp issues linked with sports.

Archery is illustrated, for example, on the stamps of Lithuania and Mexico. Germany has a stamp honoring auto racing. Ecuador and Panama present basketball figures on stamps, and Bulgaria and Russia show bicycling. Baseball is the national game of America, but only last year the United States got around to a baseball stamp issue, being scooped by several years on the idea by Colombia, Nicaragua and Panama.

Four nations have honored boxing on their stamps—Ecuador, Greece, the Netherlands and Panama. Bulgaria and Russia go in for bicycle-stamps. Not Spain or Mexico, but Greece honors bull fighting. A half-dozen countries put out horsemanship and fencing issues. Finland has a skiing stamp, naturally enough, and Greece, Switzerland and Ecuador show wrestlers on stamp issues.

In fact, it goes on and on. A Netherlands stamp bears the likeness of an athlete putting the shot, and Yugoslavia shows a weight lifter in action. Greece is only one of the countries presenting the classic discus thrower on a stamp. Ireland, of course, gives you a stamp depicting the national sport of hurling. But in the United States, only baseball and track have made the grade with the Postoffice Department.

Grid Coach Denies Use Of Coercion

Bachman, Mich. State, Says He Did Not Rule 'Football Only'

East Lansing, Mich., Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Charles Bachman, Michigan State College Football coach, denied today that he had used coercion to force football prospects to abandon other college sports.

The charge, made by the Michigan State News, a student publication, also was denied by other coaches at the college. A letter signed "Varsity Footballer" alleged Bachman had instructed "the best quarter-mile prospect the college ever had . . . to forget track and come out for spring football as football is the sport that counts around here." The student paper pointed also to the cases of seven prominent football players who had dropped either basketball or track.

"It makes no difference to me what sport a man participated in as long as his marks are what they should be," Bachman said. "Anyone interested could see for himself the large number of men who have won letters in more than one sport, including football."

Smacko Easy Victor At Birthday Show

Veteran Jumper Takes Event in Record Time; Gene Autry, Film Cowboy Star, Thrills Crowd at Ft. Myer Benefit Show

By Anne Hagner

With some of the best performance seen for a long time in a local equine event, the President's Birthday Horse Show opened in the Fort Myer riding hall last night before a near-capacity crowd.

Outstanding victory among the early classes was Capt. Charles B. McClelland's triumph in the fault-and-out event with Smacko, his brilliant 8-year-old bay, which has made an enviable record in recent horse shows. Smacko zipped around the formidable course in the record time of 41 seconds to defeat 30 of the vicinity's best open horses and to take home a large portion of Fort Myer's silver in token of victory.

Capt. McClelland's mount is as accustomed to blue ribbon-winning as he is to eating oats, for he has been making a clean sweep of every show he has entered for the past year. After annexing the championship of Fort Myer's winter indoor series last year, he invaded several big Northern shows, many Virginia ones, and wound up as the outstanding military mount at the National Horse Show in Madison Square Garden.

Crocus Places Third

As military mounts took three out of four awards in the fault-and-out, Lieut. O. K. Kane's Ard Patrick placed second and Capt. Kenneth Hoge's Broomfield took the fourth ribbon, leaving only the third notch for a civilian rider. This turned up in a rank outsider, Elizabeth Lyons' good hunting horse, Crocus, which had been given little consideration in such company as Capt. J. H. Collier's Gay Cockade, Fred Hughes'

Eagles Blossom Into Big Time With Song of Their Own

Every college has its song, even the Redskins have their personal refrain, and now the Washington Eagles hockey team have their own musical inspiration—"Here Come the Eagles."

The new number will be introduced tomorrow night when the New York Rovers come to town to oppose the Eagles at Riverside Stadium and will be especially recorded and played at future games.

The musical score was written by Al Stern, former Washington newspaperman, and the lyrics are by Joe Holman, the Eagles' publicity director. Stern, director of the National Press Club's chorus, has had a hand in several outstanding local musical scores in recent years. The new song was given a "preview" at the Ice Hockey Writers Association luncheon yesterday at The Stables.

Three Goals in 1st Period Launch Wide Eastern League Win

By the Associated Press

Baltimore, Jan. 24.—The Baltimore Orioles clicked from the opening face-off and blanked the New York Rovers, 5 to 0, in an Eastern Amateur Hockey League game.

The Rovers failed to show their usual stuff, and lacked any sustained scoring drive. Baltimore, on the other hand, drilled in the first score at 9:59 of the first period and followed with two more before the end of the stanza.

Patty Berg, in Perfect Health Returns to Women's Golf Wars

By the Associated Press

Ponte Vedra Beach, Fla., Jan. 24.—Seven months absence from tournament golf, enforced by an appendectomy just before the National championship last summer, seems to have taken little from the game of red-haired, freckle-faced Patty Berg.

The sturdy little Minneapolis fairway queen, who in a short span of years has won more than a share of trophies ranging downward from the big cup emblematic of the United States National, stopped by here en route to Miami and her first tournament competition since she won the Transmissisippi last June.

"I'm working hard on my game," she remarked. "You can't tell, though, how you'll go after a long layoff. I've played well in practice, but tournament golf is a different matter."

Starts Big Swing

Accompanied by her father, Patty planned to make the Miami-Biltmore Tournament, starting next Monday, her first port of call in a winter circuit swing that will keep them on the go until April 1. She will be seeking her fifth Miami-Biltmore title.

"You know," the little redhead declared, "it takes a good while to get back in stride after you leave off for a while. But I'll soon find out. There will be some fine golfers in the Miami tournament and I hope it is warm there. We've been going for 14 days now and only had about four days of decent weather."

Miss Berg came here from Columbia, S. C., where she participated in an exhibition to help raise funds for infantile paralysis. There, with the weather none too favorable, she shot a 39—37—76 against the course par of 72.

Operation Helped

"I have felt a lot better since my appendectomy," said the Minnesota golfing ace. "I hated to miss the national championship (won by Betty Jameson), but I'll be right back after my title this summer unless something else happens."

She has a good sized campaign laid out for the summer competition, headed principally by the national championship at Pebble Beach, Del Monte, Calif. First on the program will be defense of her Transmissisippi championship at St. Louis in June.

After the 'trans' she will participate in the Western Open at Milwaukee and the first week in August will take a shot at the Western Derby at Wilmette, Ill. Then follows the Western Amateur at Seattle, Wash., which precedes the national championship.

Virginia U. Five Finishes Strongly to Defeat Navy, 29 to 26

Middies Lead at Half; Squires and Harmon Divide Point Honors; Game Hard Fought

Special Dispatch to The Post

Annapolis, Md., Jan. 24.—Virginia's superior ball-handling brought to a second-half advantage here this afternoon and gave it a 29-to-26 victory over Navy after a particularly hard-fought and slow-scoring contest.

It was the tenth victory for the Cavaliers in 11 starts. For the Navy it was the fifth defeat in six contests, but the local contingent saw its team exhibit a lot more fire than in any previous game and a very distinct improvement.

The Navy did not have the services of Capt. Mike Hanley, guard, and Phil Gutting, rangy center, but the absence of those players was not felt, with Falconer and Lee putting up good games at guard, and Holmes and Smith at center.

Middies Lead

Lew Squires, a sophomore Navy forward, started the scoring by dropping a goal from the foul line. Incidentally, Squires had five of these chances and accepted them all. With his two field goals, his total score was 9 points, which knotted him with Virginia's Beall Harmon for the high-scoring honors of the game.

Blackwell and Feldman scored from the floor after 5 minutes of playing to give Virginia a lead which it did not lose until just at the close of the half.

Feldman and Buchanan were the leading scorers of the Cavaliers during the half, and the visitors were leading, 14 to 9, when the Middies put on the flurry of scoring which gave them their 1-point advantage.

Lee, Squires Score

Lee scored on a long shot, Squires met with double success on his tries from the foul line, and Barton, who had come in the game for Ebnet, scored the final goal just as the half-time whistle blew.

The Navy's Smith scored from the floor the first goal of the second half, but Harmon scored twice from the floor to give Virginia a lead which the Sailors could not close up.

Hoyas' Martin Looms Large in Loyola Clash

Soph Forward, Who Nearly Tripped Terps, To Play Saturday

Don Martin, sophomore forward, will be one of Georgetown University's best bets Saturday night when it endeavors to snap its losing streak at five consecutive games against Baltimore Loyola College's basketball team at Tech High School's gymnasium, 8:30 o'clock.

This game is to donate all of its receipts to the President's Birthday Paralysis Fund and will be preceded by a preliminary involving Georgetown's freshmen and the Baltimore Loyola Jayvees at 7 o'clock.

Martin, a fine shot at his best in the pinch, all but upset the heavily favored University of Maryland tossers as the Hoyas were nosed out recently, 28 to 27, just falling short on a free toss that would have tied the score.

Coach Elmer Ripley yesterday predicted stardom for Martin and Buddy O'Grady, his sophomore forwards, who have stolen the show from upper classmen in recent games.

"O'Grady already has gained himself a starting job at forward and Martin is pressing hard for a starting call," Ripley declared. "A continuation of Don's recent form will make it mighty hard to keep him out of there."

No fewer than three sophomores will be started by the Hoyas Saturday when O'Grady and Al Lujack play the forwards and Jim Giebel jumps center

Greenkeeper Goes to College To Try to Help Your Putting

Maryland U. Scene of 3-Day Session; Experts on Turf Address Gathering; Delegates From N. Y. to Norfolk Present

By Merrell W. Whittlesey

Although the nearest blade of grass was under a cool foot of snow, the second annual Short Course for Greenkeepers opened yesterday at the University of Maryland with delegates from New York to Norfolk present.

The three-day session is sponsored by the university, with Prof. Ernest N. Cory, State entomoligist in charge, and the Mid-Atlantic Association of Greenkeepers, under President John Roche, of Baltimore.

The problems of those interested in the maintenance of fine turf attracted greenkeepers, golf professionals and representatives of nurseries, cemeteries and universities.

The Maryland short course is one of several staged throughout the country, principally for the benefit of the golfers. Others will be held at Penn State, Rutgers, Michigan State, Iowa State, Massachusetts State, Purdue, Minnesota and the University of Wisconsin. The National Turf Conference and Equipment Show will be held February 6-9 in New York.

Study Now Necessary

Club members no longer associate the greens staff of their clubs with merely cutting the grass and raking the traps. The problems of chemistry, soil analysis, agronomy, engineering, entomology, pathology, botany and other scientific terms are necessary to their positions.

The heavy snow throughout the East held the attendance to 35 at the Horticultural Building yesterday, but double that number is expected for the remaining sessions today and tomorrow. The program was late getting under way and Dr. H. C. Byrd's welcome was deferred until today, but the members were lectured by four University of Maryland professors, R. P. Thomas, on "Reaction of Chemicals in Soils;" H. L. Stier, on "Seeds;" George S. Langford, on the control of that big, bad bug, the Japanese bettle, and R. W. Carpenter, farm machinery.

Fred Grau will visit the meeting today to talk on "Trouble-shooting on the Golf Course," while O. J. Noer will make the trip from Milwaukee to talk, appropriately enough, on "Visiting Golf Courses Far and Near." Members of the greens section of the United States Golf Association are also on the remainder of the program that includes M. E. Farnham, of the Philadelphia Country Club, who'll tell how to design a course for a National Open.

Many From Distance

Anthony H. Maslin, greenskeeper at the exclusive Westchester Country Club, Rye, N. Y., and E. R. Steiniger, from famed Pine Valley, N. J., traveled the longest distance to attend the course, while Hugh McInnes, York, Pa., professional; Ivan Gantz, Lancaster, Pa., greenskeeper; James McMenamin, of Norfolk, and Jake Wilsa, Cumberland, were others who traveled a considerable distance.

A question forum will be an innovation to the program today, where the greenkeepers will pop queries to the professors and instructors on hangover problems from last summer.

Sammy Snead To Resume Competition

Golfer in Good Shape Since Having Bad Teeth Extracted

By the Associated Press

Palm Beach, Fla., Jan. 24.—The professional golfing brigade now on the annual treasure hunt in California had better make the most of current opportunities because Sluggin' Sammy Snead is getting ready to resume shooting for his cut.

Thrown off his stride by illness, Snead started a comeback by winning the Miami Open last month but again had to drop out of the big time circuit because of his health.

Snead has had more teeth pulled since then and thinks he is about ready to swing back into competition—probably within the next two weeks.

"I'm just getting started again," he said. "The doctor wouldn't even allow me to play until a week ago last Monday. But it feels good to be hitting them again."

Observers agreed Slammin' Samuel must be feeling fair-to-middling good. Saturday he whacked out a neat 68 over the par 70 Palm Beach Country Club course and Monday he really warmed up with a 32-32—64 over the Palm Beach Golf Club layout, lopping 6 strokes from par and setting a new course record.

Sammy, who has been one of the more popular figures in the pro golfing caravan, had to pass up the $5,000 San Francisco Open, the $3,000 Bing Crosby tournament and other California events but plans to rejoin the top-flighters on their swing back to Florida.

"I'll probably pick them up at San Antonio about February 6," he said, "and I hope to be in condition then to go after titles in the balance of the winter schedule."

Chestertown, Md., Jan. 24 (AP).—The midwinter meeting of the Eastern Shore Baseball League, scheduled for tomorrow at Federalsburg, was postponed today until February 1 because of bad weather.

President Harry S. Russell said the league's directors would discuss the possible effect that Commissioner K. M. Landis' recent rulings might have on the Shore League clubs.

C. U. Five Seeks 1st Victory Over Terriers

Game Here Tonight Is Cards' Sixth; St. Francis Strong

Coach Fod Cotton's victory-starved Catholic University basketball team makes another attempt to grab the brass ring tonight when it opposes St. Francis, of Brooklyn, at the C. U. gym.

The Cardinals, losers in five straight starts, may still be in the red after tonight because the Terriers have one of their traditionally strong teams. St. Francis is coached by Rody Cooney, former pro star who played for the old Palace Club here many years ago. Under Cooney, the Terriers have won 102 and lost 41 in seven years for an average of .713.

Last year, St. Francis won 16 and lost 7 and that was considered a "bad" season. Bolstering last year's varsity is the freshman team that won 17 of 23 games. Cooney has ample replacements and a large squad, so the outlook doesn't appear very encouraging for C. U.

Cotton has been drilling his charges hard and the Cards have lost the sluggishness that marked their early games. For one thing, the team is breaking faster and is in fine condition. Fod indicated he would stand pat with Pete Sachon and Joe Carrig, forwards; Carmen Pirro, center, and John White and Gene Daly, guards.

St. Francis' probable line-up will have Capt. Joe Dzienkiewicz and Benny Benigno, guards; Jerry Bussell, center, and Jim Naughton and Carl Malfitano, forwards. The game starts at 8:15.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

CONSIDINE

Three moves that should change college football history have taken place since the close of the grid season. Stanford, which has a huge football investment to protect, hired Clark Shaughnessy, coach of the incredibly inept Chicago University team. A few years ago he would have been held personally responsible for his club's flop. Now the public realizes that in most cases a coach is only as good as the pros, semi-pros and legitimate stars he and his scouts are permitted to dig up. Shaughnessy's case may well be a turning point in this ancient misconception.

Now comes the Wolfpack Club, an alumni group of North Carolina State College, with word that the school's athletic teams will be openly subsidized during the next five years. The Wolfpack Club will raise the money to pay for the athletic scholars who will come to Raleigh. This is the frankest and most fearless thing a major college has done in my experience, and is all the more remarkable when one remembers that the man to whom N. C. State (as well as North Carolina U.) is responsible was the author, a few years ago, of a campaign to rout all hint (or mention) of proselyting from the premises. This, mind you, when one of the stars of the N. C. U. line had served a previous stretch with Catholic University's football team.

"The Wolfpack Club intends to create a fund sufficiently large to give our coaches in all sports the athletic material they need and should have in order to meet the powerful teams on our schedules," D. W. Siefert, president of the club, announced. "We know that there are many fine boys who are unable to obtain their education except through such means as those we are creating." We are confident that the good the club will do along this line will offset any harm, if there is any, of openly subsidizing athletes.

"We might as well face the facts," continues this clearest thinking old grad. "Character is what you really are; reputation is what people think you are. Our institution is rich in character. Yet, popular opinion is that the finest schools are those producing the best athletic teams. And, granted athletics are a good publicity medium, we intend to capitalize on them, not to the extent of hiring a bunch of professionals to get the job done, but to the extent of having our athletic teams match the high academic standing of our institution."

As far as we know, no school has raised its hands in horror over this. They'd better not. The people are getting sick of the sham and pretense of schools which feign horror at the thought of helping a

Actor No Match In Golf Play -Against Guldahl

Friends matched Actor Peter Hayes (handicap 17) with a player they said had a 13 handicap. Hayes was given two strokes at nine, but trailed going to the tenth. He was granted an additional advantage.

"Say," he confided, "that guy's a darn good 13-handicap man."

Ralph Guldahl, two-time Open champion.

Greentree Stable's Armor Bearer Takes Feature at Hialeah

Wins Over Bucking by Length

Track Muddy for Second Straight Day; Many Horses Are Scratched

By the Associated Press

Hialeah Park, Fla., Jan. 24.—Taking the lead at the break and holding it all the way in tenacious fashion, Mrs. Payne Whitney's Armor Bearer accounted for his second straight triumph when he beat J. E. Widener's Bucking by a length in the grade "B" handicap that topped today's program.

Third money went to W. E. Boeing's Chief Gamble, the rank outsider in the field of five, another length behind. Sandy Boot was fourth, with One Jest last. Armor Bearer with a $3.40-for-$2 choice under Eddie Arcaro. The latter, leading pilot of the season, rang up his fifteenth success of the meeting astride the 5-year-old gelded son of St. Brideaux—Gallant Lass.

In the previous race, a grade "C" handicap at the same distance of 6½ furlongs, Royal Blue made faster time in the deep, muddy going. Armor Bearer finished in 1:20 3-5, two-fifths of a second slower than Royal Blue's effort. The latter won easily, while Armor Bearer was under a drive.

Carried Top Weight

Top weight under 119 pounds, Armor Bearer was hustled into a length advantage over Bucking and One Jest. The latter soon dropped back and, although saving ground at the final turn, could not keep up. Bucking drew up to virtually even terms with the favorite as they swung for home. Arcaro's mount appeared to carry Bucking wide through the home lane but the Greentree gelding raced like the better of the two, drawing away again in the final 70 yards.

The first of the two graded handicaps, for class "C" horses, resulted in a one-sided victory for C. W. Pershall's Royal Blue, the $5.90-for-$2 choice. Ghost Queen was the runner-up a half length before Greeny. Taking the track at the break, Royal Blue just toyed with his four rivals and stepped past the wire with five lengths to spare.

Hirsch Jacobs Saddles Another

The gooey going held no terrors for the 4-to-1 chance Holton, which galloped to a four-length success in the 7-furlong second contest. Mordecai was just as easily second over Cornwallis, which broke poorly and ran a game race. Holton wore down Mordecai after 5 furlongs and drew out in hollow fashion. The favored Persuasive lacked his usual foot away from the gate. He was rushed into contention, then flattened out badly.

Hirsch Jacobs, who is now seeking to top all American trainers for the eighth straight year in the matter of winners saddled, clicked in the third race with the Argentine mare Cerisse III. The 7-year-old sprinter, a victim of bad racing luck last time out, set her own pace despite racing very wide from the top of the stretch home. She beat Sugarage by two lengths. William Palmer, bothered during the running, was an easy third. The winner was a $6.70 choice.

Liberty Ann, a recent winner by five lengths over a fast track, repeated by the same margin in the fourth race of 7 furlongs. June Bee, a favorite in the field of seven 3-year-old fillies, was next in line, three lengths better than damaged goods. Liberty Ann was rated behind June Bee and Zelkova in the early running. She dashed to the front as if the others were tied to a post when Tommy May let out a wrap. The combination returned $8.30.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BLUE LILY, $8.10, $3.70, $2.80; CHANCE CUT, $2.40, $2.20; BROWN FLOWER, $3.10.

BLUE LILY took command at once, displayed keen speed in the going and always held her opposition safe, winning with speed in reserve. CHANCE CUT broke forwardly, but stumbled after taking a few strides and made a game effort, but was not good enough. BROWN FLOWER, hard ridden from the start, was unable to better her position. I BID lacked speed in the going.

HOLTON outbroke the field, was eased back and went in close attendance of MORDECAI in the early stages and then drew away at his leisure in the last furlong. MORDECAI showed good speed in the going, but was no match for the winner. CORNWALLIS, away tardily, closed a big gap and outgamed CAMISADO. The latter finished strong.

Dear Al:

I hope all the Benningites were snowed in their houses yesterday and that their phones were not working. Confucius and I drew a blank or did I miss one? Tell the truth, I was ashamed to check the results carefully. Confucius (now batting .333) says: Totache give bookie headache in second today. Pardon me if I go from here with a bit of Frank Menke's good Kentucky Derby publicity. Push over a bit, boys, and make room for Roscoe Goose, who rode a Kentucky Derby winner, and wishes to explain a situation which has puzzled even the scientifically inclined all through the intervening 27 years.

"Yes, sir," avows Roscoe, "I steered that Donerail home on top in 1913. The payoff on him is the Derby record—$91.45 for every $1 bill that backed him. Sure, I was surprised. But not half so much as this Donerail. Coming back to weigh out, he caught himself a case of jitters, and when they tried to hang a floral horseshoe around his neck, I'll be danged if he didn't oppose 'em. Kicked plenty of holes in the afternoon breeze, and carried on shameful.

"Well, I bumped around on Donerail's back for quite a spell, while the good people tried to tack on the posies, but when the officials signale me to hit the ground, and come and weigh out, I then figured the day's business was finished, and was high-tailing it for the jockey room, when I heard some people yelling at me, and waving me to come back to Donerail.

"I looked at where they pointed, and sure enough, they had the flowers around his neck, and the photographers wanted a picture. I went back, climbed up on Donerail, and the boys shot our picture. And that, gentlemen, is explanation of how it happens that of all Derby winners snapshotted with flowers around the neck, and a jock smiling down, Donerail is the only one without a saddle for the jockey to sit on."

BILL.

First race—Double Call appears as good as anything in the day's hop, skip and jump for juvenile colts and geldings. This one is said to have speed and the position near the outside helps. Coupon, with the alert Schmidl to do the booting, may be close. Fly Gent for the show end.

Second race—Ambuscade, breaking off the rail, could be the right one in this rather open affair. Gets in light and will have Flinchum to do the riding. Deep Summer and Baltee are possibilities.

Third race—Sun Girl turned in a whale of a race last out and appears ready to make it two in a row. Gets a steadying assignment and Mike Caffarella will ride. Woodsia is better than generally rated and will be a factor. Lady Orchid may surprise at long odds.

Fifth race—Perhaps I'm asking too much of Roar. However, I have seen this one down better than these and I shall string along. Highomar is good now and plenty dangerous. The Thrush for the minor award.

Miller Announces Terp Ring Lineup

Catholic U. Coach Loses Gus Gerson

Welterweight Fails To Show Up After Victory Last Week; Cox to Meet Strang

While Coach Eddie LaFond pondered what steps to take to round his Catholic University boxing team into shape for its Saturday night date with Maryland University, Heinie Miller, the Terps' coach, got down to business yesterday by announcing his tentative line-up.

As if seeing three of his star fighters benched for the night's business were not enough, a new problem confronted LaFond yesterday in the lightweight division.

He had planned to use a newcomer, Gus Gerson, in the 135-pound spot in the place of an inexperienced John Tedder. Gerson, a southpaw, turned out after but two days practice and scored an impressive victory last week over McGill's Gordon DeBlois in the welterweight division. He has been conspicuously absent all week, however, and LaFond will have to reshuffle his hand.

Maryland's line-up has Newton Cox, Southern Conference senior middleweight champion, scheduled to meet the Cardinals' Gerry Strang. The Terps will have Hotsy Alperstein in the welterweight spot and Nathan Askin in the 135-pound division.

In the 120-pound class, Miller will choose between Johnny Harn and Eddie Naughton, a southpaw, who has been making rapid progress. It will be Bob Bradley or Charlie Dorr in the 128-pound class.

Tom Coleman is expected to get the call over Whitey Hathaway in the 155-pound class, while the light heavyweight role will be filled by Izzy Leites or Josh Hughes. Hughes, however, may take the heavy duties of Bob Brown.

White, Dusek Meet in Benefit Bout Tonight

Ernie Dusek, of the "riot squad" Duseks, will furnish the opposition for Tarzan, and Tuffy Leemans, star back of the Giants, will take up a position in his teammate's corner as second for the third time.

Although new to the local ring, Tarzan has captured a warm spot in the local wrestling gentry's heart with flying tackle victories over Chief White Feather, Rudy Dusek and Ralph Garibaldi.

Ernie will be out to avenge the honor of his clan, Joe Cox, who was defeated by Ernie last week, faces Tommy O'Toole in the semi-final. Other supporting bouts bring together Chief White Feather and Lou Plummer, Frank Judson and Joe Maynard and Alan Eustace and Tommy Rae.

Cub Scout Offers To Pay Fine Levied by Landis

Rowland, you recall, brought a $1,000 fine down on the Cubs by talking business with Benny McCoy and Roy Cullenbine before Commissioner K. M. Landis had cut them loose from Detroit.

So Rowland offered to pay the fine—and Owner Phil Wrigley accepted.

"Rowland has volunteered to pay the club's fine personally," explained Wrigley, "and I think it will do him good to pay at least part of it."

Mother Presents Cup to Daughter at Fort Myer

It was a proud moment for Patricia Henry (left) when her mother, Mrs. Guy V. Henry, wife of Maj. Gen. Henry, stepped forward to present her the trophy symbolic of her first place in the Green Hunters class at opening of the President's Horse Show last night at Fort Myer. Here she is receiving the cup after riding Gabby Scamp to victory

Rovers Upset Is Eagles' Goal Tomorrow

The Eastern Amateur Hockey League-leading New York Rovers will return to Riverside Stadium tomorrow night to oppose the second place Washington Eagles in an important match at 8:30 o'clock.

The Eagles and Rover Boys, tied in their series thus far this season at 3-3, are expected to play before the largest crowd of the 1940 season.

The Rovers will feature three of the five leading Eastern Amateur League individual scorers in Albert Collings, center, who is setting the pace with 68 points; Murdo McKay, who is second with 56, and Frank Boucher, jr., who is fourth with 52.

Washington's Hal Dewey, brilliant right wing who has undergone a recent slump, now is third among the scorers with 55 points, and Norman Calladine, Baltimore's center, is fifth with 52.

By way of making the Rover Boys the most potent collection of scorers in the Eastern League statistics released yesterday reveal that Mitchel Pechet is sixth ranking scorer with 48 points and Len Loree, No. 8, with 21.

The Eagles and Rovers recently have participated in two of the most cleanly contested matches in Eastern League history. The teams played through an entire contest without having so much as a penalty called against them on New Year's Day, at Madison Square Garden, as the Eagles triumphed, 8 to 1.

The powerful Rover boys, despite an injury riddled line-up of several weeks ago, have surmounted all obstacles and currently are striding out in front of the Eagles by six points, or three full matches.

Coach Redvers Mackenzie of the Eagles, however, envisions a slump for the Rovers and a spurt by his Eagles which will return them to the championship running in short order.

Gloves Boxing Show Postponed

Heavy snow and the fact that there will be no professional boxing in Washington until February 5 caused postponement of the Golden Gloves boxing matches scheduled for last night at Turner's Arena until Monday night.

All reservations made for last night's quarter-final matches, for which 16 bouts have been lined up, will be held at the arena box office until Monday's show, James A. Sullivan, chairman of the Gloves committee, announced.

Frank Allan Loses In Florida Golf

St. Augustine, Fla., Jan. 24 (U.P.).—Seventeen-year-old Dick Doeschler, of the Bolles Military Academy, Jacksonville, today eliminated Frank Allan, of Pittston, Pa., twice winner of the tournament and defending titleholder, 3 and 2, in quarter-finals of the annual Winter Golf Championship of Florida.

Armstrong's Power Beats Montanez

Stop it!" from tenderhearted fans—and gamblers who had bet on Armstrong. This blood had come down from a deep gash at the outside of Montanez' right brow—a bloody gully that was carved out in the second round.

The same left hook that floored Pedro for counts of five and seven in the fourth session again smashed him to the canvas in the eighth round, just two seconds before the bell sounded.

Saved By Bell

The bell saved Pedro then, but it was a futile rescue. Because little perpetual motion tore after helpless Pedro in the ninth and bashed him without return until the referee intervened.

Armstrong, scaling 139¾, the heaviest of his career, indicated by tonight's impressive showing that he is ready to try for his fourth world title and another pugilistic record. Henry, former featherweight and lightweight king, now craves a crack at the middleweight crown claimed by both Ceferino Garcia and Al Hostak. Montanez scaled 144½ pounds for tonight's battle, his natural fighting weight.

The judges were Joe Lynch and Marty Monroe and the referee, Billy Cavanaugh.

Steve Belloise, of New York, a welterweight and brother of Mike—former claimant of the featherweight championship—was impressive in registering his twenty-second straight victory. He registered a technical knockout over Vinnie Vines, of Schenectady, N. Y., after having Vines on the floor three times. The referee halted the bout in the fifth round. It was slated for six. Beloise weighed 146½ pounds; Vines, 141¾.

Highlight on the program from the point of view of the hundreds of young fry present was the sudden appearance of Cowboy Star Gene Autry on Pal O' Mine in the midst of the Troop F rodeo ride that wound up the activities. As the audience applauded enthusiastically, the Western actor and his palimino galloped around the ring and halted in the center to receive an honorary ribbon from another film star, Judy Canova, who was a surprise guest. As a climax, Gene mounted one of Troop F's steeds and jumped him through a hoop of fire, to the intense excitement of everybody concerned.

Another heavy winner last night was Maj. Gen. Guy V. Henry's steady chestnut, Gabby's Scamp, who won the class for green hunters and placed second to Charles Garrico's Recall in the hunter hacks. Patricia Henry rode the smooth-performing thoroughbred.

Second to Gabby's Scamp in the green division was Capt. James Quill's Smooth Seas, which scored over Lieut. Kane's Lord Barrie and the Springsbury Farm's Abdication, ridden by Shirley Payne.

Final class on last night's card was the open jumping event over a winding course that was the Waterloo of many an unsuspecting horse. Winner was the Government-owned Clipped Wings, for years one of Fort Myer's consistent winners.

An equally large number of Hollywood celebrities are expected to be on hand for tonight's gala closing performance of the show. Chief among them is another cowboy star, Bill Boyd, and others who are in town for the President's Birthday Ball.

Ice Palace Women's Team Wins Feature

Rosslyn Beaten Despite Mrs. Rose's High Set of Night

Lucy Rose continued her high-scoring streak in the Ladies' District League feature match last night, but her Rosslyn mates suffered a letdown and Ice Palace won two out of three games from the league leaders on the winners' alleys.

Mrs. Rose totaled a 159 game and 394 set, highest of the night in three matches, but the Ice Palace girls were more consistent and, led by Marie Spates, with a 137 game, and Eleanor Bark, a 372 set, won the odd game. The winners' high game and set totals were 581 and 1,690.

Lorraine Gulli posted 117-340 to pace Lucky Strike to an odd game triumph over Red Circle. Helen O'Dea was high for the losers with 143-345.

The league rule of no postponements cost Margaret Lynn's Arcade-Pontiac three games as they were forced to roll with only two players, using three dummy scores, and dropped all three to Arcadia, with Peggy Sullivan's 126 game and Esther Burton's 334 set best.

ICE PALACE

The entire slate of season's records were erased in the U. S. Engineers League at Ice Palace as Mike Vitale and his Hot Shots were just that for the evening in rolling up four new marks. Vitale smacked out a 178 game and 446 set and his mates a 666 team game and 1,729 set.

Bob Mason led the individuals in the C. & P. Telephone League with 147—391, while Accounting's team total of 632 and 1,731 were not beaten.

TEMPLE

Three games of 131 or better for a 410 set total earned the season's second high set total for Al Works in the Temple Minor League at Temple Alleys. Eastern Pharmacy rolled top team set, 1,689, and Frank's Tavern the best game, 583, in a clean sweep from Benning.

LUCKY STRIKE

Three ladies' leagues at Lucky Strike found four season's record scores written into the record books. Maude Cunningham had a 140 game in the Commissioner and Miscellaneous League for a new record. The leading Personnel team dropped the odd one to General Council No. 1, led by May Balaguer's 131-391.

Commerce accounted for the new marks in the Lucky Strike Ladies League, with a 517 game and 1,531 set that beat Federal Security three games. Gertrude Rasch had 132-347 for Social Security.

Heurich League Play-off Postponed

The first-half championship play-off game of the Heurich Amateur Basketball League, originally scheduled for last night, was postponed due to the heavy snowfall that had settled over the District.

Boston Wool Market

Boston, Jan. 24 (AP) (U. S. Department of Agriculture).—Demand was very slow and prices were irregular in domestic wools in the Boston market today. Very little business was being transacted in fine and half-blood grades. Scattered sales were closed on three-eighths and quarter-blood territory wools. Combing territory wools of these grades were moving at 81 to 83 cents, scoured basis, for three-eighths blood and 73 to 76 cents for quarter-blood. Offerings on country-packed, three-eighths and quarter-blood mixed lots of bright fleeces, were showing an increase at prices ranging 41 to 43 cents, in the grease, delivered here.

D. C. Building League Assets Hit New High

22 Associations Report Resources Of $138,150,000

William N. Payne, jr., president of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League, told members of the executive council at the luncheon meeting yesterday that resources and activities of the member groups now stand at an all time high. Reviewing the rapid growth of the savings and loan movement, Payne pointed out that the assets of the associations since 1870 have almost doubled each decade.

Figures compiled revealed that in 1880 assets were listed at $439,000 against $175,000 in 1870. In 1890 they had increased to $3,826,000, in 1900 to $8,229,000 in 1910 to $15,158,000. By 1920 resources doubled to $30,897,000 while in 1930 the aggregate stood at $74,051,000. An astonishing growth paced the ten years up to the present time, when, according to Payne assets increased steadily until they now total $138,150,000. The 22 associations comprising the league have customer contacts with over 145,000 people, stated Payne.

Martin A. Cook, general chairman of the 1940 banquet committee, announced that the Mayflower Hotel will be the scene of the annual affair. Date set was March 23 and it is expected that 500 members and their guests will attend. Yesterday's meeting of the council, first of the new year, was held at the Raleigh with a full attendance.

U. S. Steel Corp. To Sell Ore to Ford Motor Co.

By the Associated Press

Pittsburgh, Jan. 24.—The United States Steel Corporation said today that negotiations were under way for the sale of a "substantial" tonnage of iron ore to the Ford Motor Co., marking "Big Steel's" entry into the open ore market.

A spokesman characterized the proposed sale as "A departure from recent practice," explaining that the corporation's ore mining subsidiary, the Oliver Iron Mining Co., normally produced ore only for other steel producing subsidiaries of the corporation or, to less extent, for other steel companies for blending purposes.

Price of the ore involved was not disclosed, but the Post-Gazette said, in commenting on the sale, that "interest in the Ford purchase was intensified by reports in Cleveland, the center of the industry, that the transaction involved a large supply at a price below that charged steel companies compelled to buy ore."

The Oliver Mining Co. recently placed an advertisement in a Duluth, Minn., mining publication, offering iron ore for sale, an action which the Post-Gazette interpreted as an indication that the steel corporation, previously not a factor in the ore trade, might be willing to make additional sales and eventually might turn to the "business of selling other forms of raw materials used in the steel industry."

American Tobacco Co. Sued for $9,000,000

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—Trial of a suit against the American Tobacco Co. for more than $9,000,000 including bonuses paid, counsel fees and the amount of a settlement with a past litigant, has been started in Federal Court. The plaintiff, Herman Finklestein, owner of 50 shares of common B stock, named as defendants George W. Hill, president; A. C. Mewer, Vincent Riggio and Charles F. Neiley, vice presidents; Paul M. Hahn, assistant to the president and later vice president; Thomas R. Taylor, vice president and auditor, and the estate of the late C. A. Penn, a vice president, and also 30 directors of the company, past and present.

Finklestein asked that the amount sought in the action be paid into the treasury of the company. He charged that the company's officers persuaded stockholders through "misleading and deceptive" information to approve bonuses for them.

New SEC Regulation

The Securities Commission adopted a new rule yesterday which provides that holding companies must file a declaration with the SEC before they may extend credit or make loans, donations or capital contributions to associate companies. The new rule is effective immediately.

No. American D. C. Budget Is $9,500,000

Bulk Will Go For Pepco Expansion At Buzzard Point

New York, Jan. 24.—New construction and expansion programs now under way or planned by operating utility companies of The North American Co., of which Potomac Electric Power Co., and Capital Transit Co. are units, are the largest in nine years and indicate cash expenditures in 1940 almost double the expenditures by the same companies in 1939, Edward L. Shea, president, announced today.

With major power plant projects in each of the operating regions in the North American system, the program involves an outlay of almost $61,000,000, of which about $38,500,000 is scheduled for expenditure in 1940. The balance of more than $22,000,000 will be carried over into 1941 for work that cannot be completed this year. New steam electric generating capacity of 265,000 kilowatts will be installed.

$255,000,000 in Ten Years

"During the last ten years, which included serious depression periods, gross construction expenditures of the North American Co.'s subsidiaries have approximated $255,000,000, of which about $215,000,000 was for electric facilities," Mr. Shea said. "In addition to the long established policy of being ready at all times to serve the growing needs of customers, it is the desire of the North American system to do its full share towards strengthening the national defense with adequate energy for industry."

District of Columbia projects planned total $12,700,000, of which $9,500,000 is for this year, including an addition to the Potomac Electric Power Co.'s Buzzard Point plant here and the installation of a new 50,000 kilowatt unit at an estimated cost of $5,000,000.

Fear of More Cold Adances Wheat Prices

By the Associated Press

Chicago, Jan. 24.—Fear that a return of bitter cold weather may injure crops, although most winter wheat was reported to be protected by snow, gave the wheat market a lift toward recovery today.

The recent decline was checked by comparatively moderate buying which overshadowed much less aggressive selling. Private reports indicated the mercury was declining in thermometers throughout much of the grain belt, with subzero readings predicted for parts of most concern was centered on the crop in Oklahoma and parts of Texas and in other localities where snow covering is bare or lacking.

Wheat closed ⅝-1⅛ higher than yesterday, May $1.00 ⅛-¼, July 97⅞-⅞; corn ⅜-½ up, May and July 57⅝-¾; oats ⅛-⅜ higher; rye ⅝-⅞ up and lard 2-10 higher.

Swiss Exports Back To Nearly Normal

Berne, Switzerland, Jan. 24 (AP).—Official Swiss statistics issued tonight showed that this little landlocked nation is winning a battle to maintain vital export trade by readjusting industries to war-time conditions. Swiss exports, on which the country lives, dropped 54 per cent during the first month of the war, but climbed back close to normal during December.

Swiss cheese exports more than doubled over the last year to reach a monthly total of 6,500,000 francs ($1,500,000), due chiefly to the lack of Finnish cheeses on the British market.

SEC Asks Re-vamping Of Van Sweringen Corp.

Cleveland, Jan. 24 (AP).—The Securities and Exchange Commission is entering reorganization proceedings of the Van Sweringen Corporation, its subsidiary, the Cleveland Terminals Building Co., and the Higbee Co., of Cleveland, Dan T. Moore, regional administrator, said today "wide public investor interest" in the firms' securities dictated the step.

Cleveland terminals owns and operates Cleveland's Terminal Tower, Higbee Building, Cleveland Hotel, and the Republican Builders Exchange and Midland Buildings. The companies are part of the real estate structure constructed by the late Van Sweringen Brothers, O. P. and M. J.

Speculative Leaders Gain 1 to 3 Points; Statement of Lewis a Major Factor; Treasury and Domestic Bonds Improve

New York, Jan. 24.—Gains of from 1 to 3 points were scored by a number of the speculative leaders in today's stock trading and the market as a whole, judged by the composite average, advanced 0.57 point. Steels and the aviations set the pace and all groups managed to close with plus averages, but trading volume continued far below normal. Only 712,180 shares changed hands and this led many in the street to regard the advance as one of technical importance only.

There was more than a technical comeback, however, to today's recovery. Wall Street is probably the first place to express a dollars and cents reaction to developments of importance, and it is impossible to disassociate from today's rally the major political news of the day; namely, the statement of John L. Lewis.

The attitude of investors on our domestic policies has been recorded by writers any number of times. There is no question but that there would be more confidence in business, and hence more willingness to risk savings, if there could be some assurance that the present group in Washington would be turned out in the November election. The possibility that this might happen was heightened today by Mr. Lewis' statement, and the stock market, most sensitive of barometers, recorded the fact immediately.

Lewis Makes Prediction

The C. I. O. chieftain, who was one of the major factors in Mr. Roosevelt's sweeping victory in 1936, predicted that if the President runs for a third term, he will go down to ignominous defeat. The financial district would like to think so, and it has a sufficient respect for Mr. Lewis to place considerable weight on his prediction. The result was the best rally in the stock market of recent days.

Politics is shaping the course of events in investment circles more than are the customary indices of business and it is a safe prediction that our present level of business would lead to a bull market if there were any reliable conviction that another year would see a new order in our national affairs. Investment of capital and expansion of business is held back by the fear of a prolongation of Federal opposition to business and unsound policies in national affairs.

Steels and Aircrafts Gain

The more speculative issues were the first to respond today to the turn of events in the day's news. Steels were helped by the weekly report of the Iron Age that shipments are still heavy, but the publication pointed out that unless new steel business comes in soon at a faster pace than has prevailed thus far in January, further curtailment of operations is inevitable. At the moment the volume of shipments is far exceeding the volume of incoming orders.

Gains in the aviation division were more sensational than those in the steels. Wright Aero, traded in at the inactive post, jumped 7 points. Most active stock of the day was Curtiss-Wright, which added nearly a point. Lockheed was up ⅞ and North American Aviation 1¼, while Glenn Martin added nearly 2 points and Aviation Corporation a fraction. The aviations and steels virtually monopolized the tape, United States Steel gaining 2¼, Republic 1, and Bethlehem 2⅞.

Bond Market Firm

Firm conditions prevailed in the listed bond market today, but gains were pronounced only in a few sections. United States Treasury issues and most domestic corporation bonds improved slightly, and dealings were small. Brazilian bonds attracted attention in the foreign dollar department, owing to persistent rumors that a small transfer for debt service may be made soon. Some other foreigns also displayed strength. Trading totaled $7,220,000.

The investment market was best reflected by the quick distribution of the new issue of $10,962,000 Pennsylvania Water & Power bonds, offered by White, Weld & Co., and associates. Treasury obligations were in modest demand, but the advances were measured only in smallest fractions. Best rated utility, railroad and industrial bonds were generally steady.

Speculative interest centered more on foreign dollar issues than upon domestic bonds. Brazilians were 1 to 2 points improved on the endless rumors of fresh debt service developments. Panama 5s fell more than 2 points on registration of a readjustment program. Scandinavian bonds were dull, but good inquiry developed for some of the belligerent country issues, notably the Australians.

Cheaper priced railroad obligations were in modest demand, the advances ranging from fractions to slightly more than a point. Reorganization rails were better than others. Local traction binds were irregular, owing to the uncertainty about some parts of the unification program. Holding company groups were firm, and a few speculative industrials also did well.

Cotton Futures Jump $1.10 to $2.10 Per Bale

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—Cotton futures turned upward today so abruptly that even veteran traders were a little giddy at the close of the market. At the last bell prices showed gains of 22 to 42 points. Support was general and the list recovered from the battering of recent sessions with not much more than a few scratches. Action of rising foreign markets was again the tip-off to the local trade.

Brokers seemed to think that speculative interests were unusually active. Traders who nervously dumped their holdings on the market earlier in the week climbed on the bandwagon when they saw how foreign prices were running.

Bombay, which has piped the price tune more than once of late, sold heavily in March and to a lesser degrees in May and July but bought October and December. Consequently new crop months posted the largest gains.

Holland to Revalue Bank's Gold Stocks

Amsterdam, Jan. 24 (AP).—The Netherlands government announced today it planned to defray mobilization expenses and strengthen its official foreign exchange control fund by revaluing upward the gold stocks of the Netherlandsche Bank.

The government proposed in Parliament yesterday that the bank's gold be marked up sufficiently to offset 18 per cent out of the 22 per cent depreciation which the guilder has undergone in the foreign exchange market. Premier Dirk Jan de Geer explained that the Netherlands would maintain the guilder on a managed currency basis.

Copper Consumption Falls in December

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—Copper consumed in the United States in December amounted to 80,500 tons, compared with 93,000 in November, the American Bureau of Metal statistics estimates.

After allowing for normal return of processing scrap to mills and foundries, the institute estimated net shipments of copper in the month totaled 71,000 tons against 82,000 in November.

1939 Postal Revenue Sets New High Record

By the Associated Press

Uncle Sam's postal revenues reached a new peak in 1939, Postmaster Farley announces that receipts for the 12 months totaled $753,867,444 a $25,035,805 increase over revenue of $728,831,630. For the 1938 calendar year, the previous record mark, Farley said that postal business during the recent Christmas holiday period was greater by a million dollars than in any previous December. The month's revenue amounted to $88,943,338 compared with $87,880,911 for December, 1938.

U. S. Rayon Output Highest in History

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—The magazine Rayon Organon reported today that production and consumption of rayon yarn in the United States in 1939 was the highest in history. Total rayon production was 384,200,000 pounds, 12 per cent more than the 341,900,000 of the previous record year of 1937 and compared with 28,476,000 in 1938. Domestic consumption last year totaled 462,375,000 pounds, another record, and 41 per cent greater than the 327,120,000 pounds of 1938.

The magazine commented: "It is estimated that in 1939 the United States produced approximately 29 per cent of the world's rayon filament yarn and about 5 per cent of the world's staple fiber output."

World's Cotton Output Exceeded By Consumption

New York, Jan. 24.—The world did not produce nearly so much cotton in the 1938-39 season as in either of the two seasons immediately previous, and it did not consume nearly so much as in the season second previous, according to a review of the 1938-39 season contained in the twelfth Cotton Year Book of the New York Cotton Exchange just issued. However, world production of the staple was larger than in any other earlier season with one single exception, and world consumption was larger than in any other previous season. World consumption was moderately in excess of world production in the season, with the result that the world carryover at the end of the season was moderately smaller than that at the end of the previous season.

Production of cotton by the world in the season of 1938-39 was roughly 25 per cent less than in the previous season, this being one of the biggest decreases from one season to the next on record, according to statistics in the book. World production dropped from 36,784,000 to 27,407,000 bales, a decrease of 9,377,000 bales. The greater portion of this decrease occurred in the United States, and was due partly to a reduction in acreage and partly to a lower average yield per acre. Abroad, smaller production was reported by China, India, and Egypt.

World consumption of cotton in 1938-39 totaled 28,513,000 bales, compared with 27,746,000 in the previous season, an increase of 772,000 bales. World consumption records for 1938-39 showed a large increase in the spinning of the staple in the United States, only slight changes in Great Britain, on the Continent of Europe exclusive of Russia, and in Russia, and moderate decreases in the Orient and elsewhere. The world carryover of cotton at the end of the 1938-39 season was 21,462,000 bales, compared with 22,639,000 at the end of the previous season.

Economics, Not Politics, Held Ruling Election Year Factor

New York, Jan. 24.—The rule in election years is that economics, not politics, are the controlling factor, according to the Brookmire Economic Service today. The popular theory that such years are necessarily bad does not stand up under the test of the facts. The election record ever since the Civil War shows the Presidential years are about as varied as the fish in the sea.

Sometimes in these election years the trend of business was up; at other times, down. Some movements occurred at high levels; others, at low levels. Sometimes they were extensive; at other times, narrow.

The Brookmire analysis of the election record for the past 70 years shows two facts: (a) Presidential election years have been favorable more often than unfavorable, (b) the latest one, 1936, was an up year in the face of the New Deal fears that are again a source of fear today.

Business, as measured by the Brookmire index, expanded from 73.3 per cent of computed normal in January, 1936, to 85.6 per cent in November. Stock prices, using the Dow-Jones industrial average as a yardstick, advanced from 144.13 at the opening session of the year to 180.66 on the day after election, when President Roosevelt's return to office became a certainty.

The rising economic tide proved decisive in 1936, and the Brookmire Service points out in conclusion that economic recovery is again prevalent in 1940.

Steel Output Dips, Awaiting New Business

Current Production For Week Estimated At 82 Per Cent

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 24.—Further curtailment of steel making operations is "inevitable" unless new business increases, Iron Age said today in a weekly survey. Ingot production for the current week was estimated at 82 per cent of capacity, a decline of 3 points from the preceding week.

"Shipments are still heavy and are far exceeding the volume of incoming orders, which range from a profitable low point of about 35 per cent of shipments in one important instance to as much as 55 to 60 per cent with other companies," the review declared.

"The current production is largely sustained by backlog tonnage carried over from the fourth quarter, but this is rapidly diminishing," said the magazine.

"While there has been a seasonal slowing down in consumption of steel by some industries, including the fabrication of structural steel, the automobile industry, barrel and drum manufacturers and tin can manufacturers, there is, on the other hand, steady use by the railroads and railroad equipment builder, the farm implement and tractor industries, shipbuilders and miscellaneous manufacturers.

"In the easier steel situation which now prevails there is sharper price competition for export orders. However, quotations are still generally above domestic levels. The volume of inquiries and orders from abroad has been gradually expanding in the past few weeks."

Scrap markets continue to show a declining trend. The Iron Age scrap composite price dropped 13 cents to $17.54 a ton, the first change since December 26.

His Speech Denies Employers Have Right to Exploit

By the United Press

Winston-Salem, N. C., Jan. 24.—Postmaster General Farley tonight defended industry's right to fair profits but warned employers that they must not exploit the workers.

In what was regarded by some as the formal opening of Farley's Presidential campaign, he told the annual chamber of commerce dinner that if industry is to carry on there must be "genuine understanding and cordial cooperation" among employers, employes, stockholders, consumers and the Government."

He used as his topic "Industry and Agriculture at the Gates of the New Decade." He undertook to eliminate politics from his remarks, but conceded that some persons would read politics into them.

Cleaves to Middle of Road

His speech followed the middle of the road on highly controversial subjects likely to be injected into the 1940 campaign. He praised President Roosevelt and the achievements of the New Deal.

Declaring that the effect of existing European wars upon American politics is utterly unpredictable and expressing confidence that the American people will subordinate partisanship to the public good, Farley said:

"I would like to make it perfectly clear without pretense or flag-waving that I am partisan in politics and honestly devoted to the success and welfare of my party. I also want to make it clear that if at any time I am confronted with the issue of the welfare of my party on the one hand, or the welfare of my country on the other, that that issue has already been decided.

Country Over Party

"I love my country better than I love the Democratic Party. It is my confident hope that I will never be confronted with such an issue; but if it should come in this hour of international chaos, I owe too much to America to sacrifice my first loyalty upon the altar of party expediency or party fealty."

Farley said labor in America no longer was a commodity, and that workers should not be "bartered, sold, trafficked and market-placed as an unhuman, senseless product." He conceded that American investors cannot be expected to risk their capital unless there is "reasonable regard" for the profit motive.

This, he continued, applies with equal force when taxes become so burdensome as to stafle private enterprise and abolish fair prospects of profit.

"If we should ever at any time rub out the profit motive we lay the foundation of the totalitarian state," he warned.

"My conception of government in business is that the government should act as an umpire, and we all know that the first duty of an umpire is fair play and no favorites, to call fouls when fouls are committed and to follow the ball without prejudice or bias," he declared.

Dr. Sly Dies; Metropolitan Pastor's Aide

The Rev. William J. Sly, D. D., associate pastor of Metropolitan Presbyterian Church, Fourth and B streets southeast, died yesterday at his home, 214 A street southeast.

Affiliated with the Metropolitan congregation since December, 1938, the clergyman succumbed to a heart attack just a few hours after returning from a meeting on world peace, a subject on which he lectured for many years.

Dr. J. Lowrey Fendrich, pastor, will officiate at funeral services for Dr. Sly at 3:30 p. m. at the Lee funeral home, Fourth and Massachusetts avenue southeast.

Protestant churches of the Southeast area, especially those interested in the Southeast inter-church organization, of which Dr. Sly was a member, will be represented at the funeral, as well as the official boards and other organizations of Metropolitan Church.

A native of London, England, he studied at the Rochester Theological Seminary, Rochester, N. Y., and later served Baptist pastorates in Philadelphia, Chicago, and Avon, N. Y. His position at Metropolitan Church was his first Presbyterian post. He was 72.

He leaves his wife, Mrs. Grace T. Sly; two sisters in Waterbury, Conn., and one sister in Brooklyn. He will be buried in East Avon.

District Jury Clears Nolan of Fraud Charge

Accused of Preparing Fictitious Mortgages Sold to Trust Company

William J. Nolan, 48-year-old former automobile dealer, was acquitted yesterday by a jury after four hours' deliberation in the District Court, of fraud and criminal conspiracy charges filed after the bankruptcy of his company here three years ago.

Nolan was accused of preparing ten fictitious mortgages on automobiles, which were sold to the Munsey Trust Co. Although the money was credited to his company's bank account, Nolan denied on the witness stand that he knew anything about the transaction.

Justice Daniel W. O'Donoghue excused until Monday the jurors, who were kept in custody Monday and Tuesday nights.

He began his trade as a carriage and wagon maker in the Virginia town, then opened a shop in Washington in 1890. For many years he operated an establishment at 428 M street northwest. He retired in 1927. He belonged to the Fifth Baptist Church.

Besides his daughter, Mr. Wilkerson leaves a son, Dr. Roland Wilkerson, and a grandson, Jack Wilkerson, both of Washington.

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

The players had a grand slam, but, alas, they bid it to the wrong declaration and were defeated five tricks.

G. E. M. says: "F. and I were 60 part-score vulnerable, he being the dealer. F. opened with a three-club bid and the opponent on his left passed. I, F.'s partner, held a five-count made up as below:

♠ A Q 7 3
♡ A K Q 8 6
◇ 4 Q 9 4
♣ None

"My thoughtless response was six no-trump, which F. answered with seven clubs. My reasoning was that F. could have bid three without the club ace, and I assumed his seven bid to indicate he held that ace. I bid seven no-trump, and found F. holding eight clubs to the ace, king, queen, jack, ten. He had the nine and six of spades and the six, three and deuce of diamonds.

"The result was a five set, as there was no possible way to get to the clubs in the dummy."

We cannot agree with either the six no-trump or the seven no-trump bid. G. E. M. could have approached the slam more slowly and with accuracy by showing his suits and learning if his partner could play any one of them.

The void in clubs should warn him that, even though F. has a set-up club suit, there may be a loser there; and instead of leaping to six no-trump, his efforts should be turned to finding a more favorable declaration at a suit contract.

As it develops, clubs is the best contract and F. will make this clear if given a chance. Certainly, G. E. M. should pass seven clubs. There is no possible justification for his seven no-trump bid. He should have realized that the most probable reason for F.'s bidding seven clubs was that he held no re-entry to his hand.

Ice-Jammed River Raises Span Fears

Special Dispatch to The Post

Winchester, Va., Jan. 24.—The return of cold weather has resulted in fears for the safety of two highway bridges across the North and South branches of the Shenandoah River near Riverton, Va., being relieved today.

Both of the bridges have been condemned as obsolete and an appropriation of approximately a million dollars has been provided to replace them beginning this spring. Watchmen have been posted at both bridges for several days.

Turns Tables

How a resourceful wife turns the tables on her alluring rival and holds her home together in the face of disaster is revealed in the new screen drama, "Married and in Love."

Listen! with Slocum

These are gay days indeed around dear old WJSV as we go gayly about the task of peddling tickets to that gala and stupendous series of dances, balls, and clambakes to be held in connection with the President's birthday (January 30).

GENE AUTRY

WJSV has been appointed the downtown headquarters for the sale of tickets and that station has built a lovely little booth in front of the entrance to the Earle Building. That booth is for your convenience, so if you're going to one, or all six of those parties, step right up and plunk your $2.50 on the line.

While a station of the prestige and dignity of WJSV hesitates to introduce dat old debbil s-x into such dealings, it has been decided that maybe a few purty gals would would help the sale of tickets, so we've got the cream of Washington's debutante crop lined up to do brief jobs as salesladies in the booth. So buy your ticket, help a worthy cause, and meet a real honest to goodness beautiful debutante. Personally, I can't wait.

Gene Autry has been bouncing around town for the last few days, tastefully draped in cowboy clothes in the Bond street manner. Mr. Autrey has made himself a lot of friends around town among that element of the citizenry that likes as not never saw Gene on the screen in his deeds of derring do.

As for Gene's movie fans, who are certainly legion, to coin a phrase, they are ecstatic at the sight of their hero, who is busier than a movie star making a personal visit to Washington. But Gene is never too busy to scrawl his name across a piece of paper or to exchange a few quips with a goggle-eyed kid.

Incidentally a week a so ago we mentioned here that it would be interesting to see a movie cowboy on a horse. In the true tradition of this column, that was inaccurate, because Gene has been riding quite a bit out at Fort Myer and the soldiers say he can really pilot a cayuse.

The Dragon's Teeth

Chapter 12

KERRIE LAUGHED aloud, nervously. That was absurd. For whoever had locked her in had locked himself—or herself, she thought darkly—out at the same time. There was no opening in these walls large enough to admit a mouse. Not even a window. High in the right-hand wall of the compartment there was a radiator-grille; it ran through to the next garage, the one for the station-wagon. But the coils of the radiator were between the two garages, behind the grilles; only a fly or a bug could go from one garage to the other by that route.

"Let me out!" She pounded on the heavy doors. They did not even shake. "Let me out!"

And then she became conscious of an undertone, a peculiar roaring hum, which seemed to come from the garage on the right . . . where the station-wagon stood.

She stopped pounding to listen.

It was the motor of the station-wagon. Some one had turned it on. And pulled out the throttle. It was roaring away. The penetrating stench of its exhaust came to her nose, floating through the grilles.

"Help!" cried Kerrie. "Whoever's in there!" She raced back and shouted up into the grille. "I'm locked in the next garage! Help!"

There was an answer, but it was not in human accents. The doors of the adjacent garage slammed shut. And over the roar of the racing motor Kerrie heard retreating footsteps.

And now she knew. Now she remembered death, when it was too late.

Someone had imprisoned her in the garage, turned on the motor of the car in the next compartment, locked the doors, and fled—leaving her to die slowly as the odorless fumes of the deadly carbon monoxide gas being generated next door seeped through the radiator-grilles.

NOW that death showed its face again, openly, Kerrie stopped shouting, stopped pounding the door, collected her thoughts with a cold deliberation that astonished the vague, fluttering, helpless part of her that was wilting and crumpling inside.

The garage was far from the house, from the servants' quarters. The sole building within hailing distance was the stable, and only the horses would be there at this time of night. It was useless, then, to scream.

As a matter of fact, she thought, sitting down suddenly on the running-board of the roadster, she had better save her breath. She had better conserve the air in the garage. Mustn't exert herself in the slightest. It would probably help to remain as close to the floor as possible. Didn't gas rise? Or maybe carbon monoxide was heavier than air. If it was, it would sink to the ground . . . Well, there was only one way to find out.

That wasn't any good. She'd merely live a little longer. Sooner or later the garage would fill with the gas, sooner or later her lungs would exhaust the oxygen supply, and then she would die.

Die!

She sat up, thinking furiously. What could she do? There must be something she could do!

Theoretically, there were two ways to save herself: to stop the flow of the gas, or to get out of the garage. Could she prevent the carbon monoxide from entering her compartment?

She glanced up and discarded that possibility at once. It was conceivable that by stuffing the openings in the grille up there with material torn from her clothing, she might prevent most of the gas from seeping through. But to do that she had to reach the grille. And the wall was so high, and the grille was so high in the high wall, that even if she put up the roadster's top and stood on it, she would still be unable to reach the grille.

She couldn't break through the walls. She might scrape through the plaster, but inside there was a core of brick. No windows. The door. . . . She couldn't break through. It was too thick. If she had an ax, she might; but she had no ax.

Think. Think!

She examined the door desperately. And then she laughed aloud. What a fool she'd been! The hinges!

All she had to do was get some tools from the roadster's kit—why, just a screw-driver would do it! Even if she couldn't reach the upper hinges, she could remove the lower ones, push the whole door outward from below, and crawl to the safety of the air outside!

SOBBING, Kerrie hurled things out of the seat-compartment—match-packets, slips of paper, scraps of lint, things, things, useless things . . . searching like a madwoman, getting splinters under her fingernails, scratching one finger so that the blood ran in a brilliant stream. Anything would do. A wrench. Anything . . .

No tools.

Stolen.

She ran back and hurled herself against the door. Again. Again. No. Don't do that. Think. Think . . .

She sank back against the door, exhausted, a severe headache pounding at her temples, the beginning of a dizziness, the beginning of a nausea . . .

Like a beacon in a foggy sea—the revolver. The revolver! She had slipped it into the side-pocket of the roadster very early this morning. Of course, she had left it for a short time . . . No. It was there. It was there. She could shoot the hinges off—the lock, the hasp, shoot, shoot . . .

Crying and laughing, she staggered back to the car weakly opening the door, weakly thrusting her hand into the pocket on the inside of the door, ready to rejoice at the cold sensation of the metal on her palm, that blessed, loaded revolver . . .

LAST CHANCE. Last chance. Last chance.

The two words synchronized with the throb of her temples. A senseless hammering that gradually took meaning, digging through the muck of horror and panic. Was it? Was it really? The very last?

Kerrie crawled over to the double-doors again, lay down on the floor, pressed her nose as close as she could to the thin line where floor and door met. And she lay still, simulating death in her stillness, struggling to breathe slowly, evenly, quietly, to conserve each precious bubble of oxyen in the garage, in her lungs . . . Grudging each breath, doling breath out to her body like a man doling out his last drops of water as he lies dying of thirst in the burning desert.

The cement floor was cold, but she did not feel its cold. Only the taste of death in her mouth and the giant pulse at her temples. Last chance. Last chance.

Was it?

She went over in her mind each physical detail of the garage, taking inventory, a ghastly job of accountancy, before her vision, which already was blurring, should become a jumble of swimming, tumbling, senseless objects, before her head should vibrate like a huge drum, before the nausea should make her so sick that sickness would drive away even the desire to keep living, before she should succumb to unconsciousness and, unconscious, gasp the last bubbles of her life away.

Garage. Three walls—blank, solid. Only that sieve of an opening, the radiator-grille, which she could not reach. The fourth wall—the doors. No tools. Useless to hurl herself against the doors. She would give, her soft tissues, her slight weight, her small muscles. She would give, not the doors.

What else?

If only the butler hadn't removed the hamper from the car. There were knives, forks in the hamper. Tools. But he had. Hamper from the car.

Car.

Car!

The car!

KERRIE clung to that conception with desperation, turning it over in her mind, searching the flaws in the thought, probing, exploring, testing.

The car. Tool. It was. It could be. 'Not a puny tool like a screw-driver. A ram. A battering ram!

She sat up quickly, reckless now of the exertion, her accelerated breathing, staring wildly at the roadster, at the space between her body and the roadster. About four feet. Not much. But it might be enough. And the rear bumper. It was a fairly heavy span of steel . . . But starting the car. That meant releasing more fumes. More carbon monoxide. It would cut short what remained of her life.

The drums in her head banged louder. She blinked, trying to bring the rear bumper into focus. Her eyes were giving way. Was that what happened? Oh, to die! Here. Don't. Think. Chance. Your last, last chance.

Take it!

She rolled feebly over, managed to steady herself on her hands and knees, crept the four long feet to the car. Around the car. Now. Up. Up into the car. Up into the car.

She bit her lower lip with the effort. The pain was remote. She tasted her own blood. Up . . . The blood dripped from her lips, stained her dress. Up . . .

How loud the drums were. What was she going to do? Car. Ram. Start the car.

Oh, yes. Key. Where was the key? Key. She had turned off the ignition. What had she done with the key?

Groggily Kerrie looked down at her left hand, felt for it with her right. Both hands swam in a sort of warm and swarming sea of shadow. Key. There it was. In her left hand. She had never let go of it.

She fell forward against the wheel, groping for the ignition key-hole with the point of the key, scratching, scraping, sliding, key in hole, key in hole . . . She bit her lip again, deliberately, on the bleeding wound. The pain was sharp this time. Sharper. Bite. Again. She cried out. But her eyes cleared for an instant.

It was in. Now. Turn it. Turn it. Slowly, slowly. There. It turned. Now. The starter. Right foot. Bring it up. Drag it, push it up. Oh, it won't move. Damn you . . . Kerrie took both hands and lifted her right leg from under the knee, carried it forward until the sole of her shoe lay on the starter.

Lean. Press.

Now!

Forward. Backward. Thud!

"Oh, the drums!" Thud Forward. Crash! Forward. Crash! Stall. . . . Start. Forward. Crash!

Better. There had been a crackly, splintery sound on that last one. Don't look around. Hang on to yourself. Keep your stomach down. Hold your head up. Right foot, left foot, one going down as the other goes up. Crash! Now shift into first, forward, stop, reverse, right foot and left foot, one going down as the other goes up. Crash!

It's going. Oh, it's going. Think of that. Never stop thinking of that. Maybe just once more. Maybe just. Forward. Reverse. Crash!

Her left and right feet were frozen to the clutch and gas pedals as hte roadster burst through the double-door, as she lay across the wheel fighting the world of falling shadows, the sickness in her body, the roaring in her head . . . burst through into the black night, rode over the door's defeated, splintered body, careened as the weight of her body shifted the wheel, crashed into a broad and ancient beech yards to the side of the low garage building . . . crashed, snarled, was silent.

As silent as Kerrie who, even as the roadster struck the tree and the shock of the impact jerked her from the driver's seat and threw her out of the car to lie crumped on the cold grass, even as unconsciousness embraced her fluidly like the arms of the sea, was sucking the sweet clean breath of the world — sucking, frowning, her bleeding lips and throat and smudged nostrils greedy . . . sucking, gulping, savoring, breathing the blessed air.

"Well?"

"All okay." The woman squinted at him. "You're past due, Mr. Rummell. I was getting worried."

Downey Fights Roosevelt's Port Nominee

Senator Accuses Leake of Violating State's Tax Laws

By the Associated Press

Charges of three criminal violations of California statutes were made yesterday by Senator Downey (Democrat), of California, against Paul R. Leake, publisher of the Woodland Democrat and President Roosevelt's nominee for customs collector at San Francisco.

Downey, challenging Leake's fitness for the collectorship, told a Senate finance subcommittee that "in my opinion as a lawyer" the nominee had violated State law in three instances by claiming, over a period of years, certain tax exemptions in California on the grounds of World War service in the Naval Reserve.

After the charges were made, the committee abruptly recessed to permit Leake to engage counsel and prepare a defense.

Leake Given Reply Time

"We will give you all the time you need, because this is an exceedingly grave charge," commented Chairman Bailey (Democrat), of North Carolina, ordering an adjournment to February 5. Leake said he would consult an attorney immediately.

The accusation by Downey gave an abrupt and startling turn to a contest which Californians have said would test the Senator's control over Federal patronage. Downey had indorsed Calvin C. Cook, Oakland Democratic leader, for the customs job, while Leake was the choice of Representative Buck (Democrat), of California, and the party wing associated with former Senator William Gibbs McAdoo.

"Mr. Leake unlawfully and fraudulently claimed exemptions under a constitutional provision of the State of California permitting honorably discharged veterans of the World War to obtain certain tax exemptions when in reality he had not served and did not have an honorable discharge," Downey said.

"He has admitted that in 1924 he inherited a one-quarter interest in an estate worth $100,000 and has continuously owned it ever since. Add to that his admission that he filed, feloniously and fraudulently, an affidavit with the (Yolo) County assessor claiming exemptions to which he was not entitled."

Leake Cites Liabilities

Leake had insisted, however, in testifying Tuesday, that he acted "in good faith" when he filed claims for the tax exemptions. He said he believed that service in the United States Naval Reserve from September 1918 to 1920, entitled him to them.

He said he believed, moreover, that he had not violated statutory provisions limiting exemption rights to individuals with less than $5,000 personal property. He estimated his present worth, aside from his newspaper property, as $63,000, but explained that in the years he obtained deductions his liabilities were such that he considered the net value of his holdings as less than $5,000.

Banquet to Honor Planning Board

Arrangements were completed yesterday for a banquet which the American Planning and Civic Association will give at the Willard Hotel next Wednesday in honor of the National Capital Park and Planning Commission.

Final plans were made at a meeting of the executive committee of the committee of 100 on the Federal City, held at the Cosmos Club with Frederic A. Delano, chairman, presiding.

Present at the arrangements meeting yesterday were Charles F. Consaul, Col. Alvin Barber, Joshua Evans, jr., Frank P. Leetch, Evan H. Tucker, Dr. Theodore S. Palmer, John DeLaMater, Miss Harlean James and Mr. Delano.

U. S. Striving to Set Beetle Against Beetle; Disease and Gregariousness to Kill Off Pests

By Alfred Friendly.

If any Japanese beetles survive the 1940 winter, the Agriculture Department has a plan to do them in. It is a fiendish device that sets beetle against beetle.

Experiments with the method in New Jersey, the department announced, have returned favorable indications. It consists of infecting a few grubs with a noxious ailment known as "milky disease." The infected pests, gregarious as all get out, circulate with their healthy brothers and bring the whole colony down with a comfortably fatal efficacy.

The department finds it "encouraging" that the bacteria which kills off the beetles can pass through the digestive tract of a bird or animal without being destroyed and can be passed on to other areas. The more sick grubs a bird eats, the sicker he makes the rest of the beetle population.

An amateur statistician in one of the Government's major departments has figured that the O'Mahoney rider to this year's Postoffice appropriation bill—which was supposed to save money by cutting down franked mail—is costing the department about $11,000.

The legislation requires quarterly reports to Congress giving the amount of franked mail, by weight and number of pieces. This requires the department in question to buy $2,000 worth of scales, and spend $9,000 in employes' time counting and weighing the mail.

The Navy Department, it was reported, has found it necessary to place a scales on every tug boat for the occasional pieces of franked mail sent out.

By a law passed in 1899, no time clock or measuring device on employes' time may be used in a Government department . . . Another law, passed in 1893, forbids any agency being closed as a mark of respect to a deceased official . . . On the same day a measure was enacted forbidding the employment of detectives from the Pinkerton, or other outside, agency to work in a Federal office . . . Superfluous publication note: The Government Printing Office announces the availability of a booklet on rabbit breeding . . . Another new leaflet tells the inside story on centipedes and millipedes in the home . . . The Interior Department's grazing division is to be known henceforth as the Grazing Service.

The Civil Service Commission holds the private opinion that the "Life Begins at 60" bill introduced by Senator Byrnes (Democrat), of South Carolina, would undo precisely those objectives which the Federal retirement system was supposed to achieve. The retirement act was designed to facilitate discharge of superannuated employes by giving them an annuity to live on. Byrnes' bill would do away with age limits for eligibility to Government jobs, and provides that to those employes who have not served 15 years on reaching 70, no retirement would be paid. The commission believes that the legislation would result in employes being kept on the pay roll long past 70, since no administrator would have the heart to fire them.

There are also original telegraphic billet doux of Lillie Langtry, Sarah Bernhardt, Melba and Lillian Russell.

Daily Worker Man Detained For Refusing to Talk to Jury

A second witness was placed in custody temporarily yesterday without formal charge, after he refused to answer questions before the extraordinary grand jury investigating Washington activities of foreign agents.

The witness, Harry Monroe, 25, New York writer for the Daily Worker, Communist Party organ, was released after five and a half hours on the promise of his attorney that he would return to the grand jury room today.

Representing Monroe was Sol. H. Cohen, New York attorney, who refused to discuss his client's situation.

Questions Secret

Henry G. O'Donnell, one of the special assistants to the Attorney General conducting the investigation, said Monroe refused to give testimony, but that the nature of the questions could not be given out because grand jury proceedings are secret by law.

O'Donnell and his colleagues, Floyd M. Rett and Durward Balch, discussed Monroe's case during the afternoon, but did not decide what to do about him. They have the power to have him taken before the District Court.

The procedure in this event would be for the grand jury to report Monroe's refusal to answer. The presiding justice, probably Justice Peyton Gordon, then would admonish Monroe that he was obliged by law to reply to the questions. Should he persist in refusing to talk he might then be returned to the court and cited for contempt.

McGill Appears

While the prosecutors conferred on his case, Monroe remained quietly in the corridor, in custody of Deputy United States Marshal Martin Finn, who remained beside from 11:30 a. m. until 5 p. m.

A. B. McGill, New York, vice president of the Weekly Masses Co., appeared in the grand jury room yesterday afternoon. His attorney, Samuel A. Neuberger, New York, waited in the corridor.

Monday, William E. Browder, a Communist leader and brother of Earl Browder, was detained by a deputy marshal after he refused to give testimony. However, he later returned to the grand jury room and concluded his examination without any proceedings being taken.

Market House Gamblers Warned

Roberts said he ordered market masters to notify tenants gambling is strictly forbidden and is cause for termination of a lease.

City of Flint To Dock Friday At Baltimore

New York, Jan. 24 (AP).—Finis to one of the strangest voyages ever made by a modern American ship will be written Friday when the City of Flint noses into Baltimore Harbor.

Halted October 9 by the German raider Deutschland, the 4,963-ton Government-owned vessel was sailed into Tromsoe, Norway, by a German prize crew. Then to the Arctic port of Murmansk, Russia. Six days later the German crew hoisted anchor, and on November 3 she put into Haugesund, Norway, where government officials seized the Nazi prize crew for internment and set the ship free.

Gen. Magruder, D. C. Native, To Command All Army Tanks

260 War Machines Being Concentrated At Fort Benning, Ga., for Maneuvers During This Winter and Spring

A Washington boy who rose from the ranks to wear a general's star, yesterday was named commander of the Army's tanks.

MAGRUDER

Brig. Gen. Bruce Magruder, a veteran of 36 years, was ordered to take command of the concentration of 260 heavily armored vehicles being massed at Fort Benning, Ga.

The largest tank command ever organized in the peacetime history of the Army, the new unit includes all such Army units except a company on the West Coast and another in Hawaii. It will take part in corps and division maneuvers this winter and spring.

Gen. Magruder was born here and attended local schools. He was a lieutenant in the District National Guard in 1903-04, resigning to enlist in the Regular Army. Within three years he had risen from private to lieutenant and was sent to the Philippines.

When Gen. Pershing was ordered into Mexico in 1916, Gen. Magruder was with him and when the United States entered the World War, he went to France with the A. E. F. He was an intelligence officer until after the Armistice.

Since the war, Gen. Magruder has been an instructor at the Infantry School and at North Carolina State College, served here at the War Department, and was commander of the Sixty-sixth Tank Regiment at Fort Meade, Md. He has been executive officer of the Infantry School at Fort Benning since leaving Meade in 1927 and was made a brigadier general two months ago.
